

Lebanese fighting continues

Associated Press
BEIRUT, Lebanon — Lebanon's feuding politicians argued today over Christian President Suleiman Franjeh's departure from office and Palestinian participation in cease-fire enforcement while the fighting continued at war level.

Police reported 179 persons killed and 302 wounded yesterday and today. There was heavy fighting during the night in the Christian-held port area and in Beirut's eastern suburbs and adjacent mountain towns.

Leftist Moslem leader Kamal Jumblatt threatened to establish a Moslem-ruled, Socialist state in which the Christians would be reduced to a powerless minority unless Franjeh delivered his signature on a constitutional amendment authorizing early election of his replacement. Premier Rashid Karami, a moderate Moslem leader, announced last Saturday that Franjeh had finally signed the amendment, but parliament cannot meet to elect his successor until he delivers it to the speaker of the legislature, Kamel Assaad.

Jumblatt said more delay by Franjeh would allow "the national and progressive forces to announce a national rule and change the political, economic and social regime."

Jumblatt's military forces were on their way to establishing such a regime in early April, but Syrian President Hafez Assad forced him to halt the advance.

Franjeh, the symbol to the Moslems of the Christians' unwillingness to relinquish their dominant political and economic position in Lebanon, sent a special envoy to Damascus. His mission was to get Assad to remove the Palestinian guerrillas from the machinery Syria is trying to set up to enforce the war's 35th cease-fire, which was supposed to take effect this week.

Franjeh's chief allies, former President Camille Chamoun and Phalange party leader Pierre Gemayel, who control the two largest Christian militias fighting the Moslems, charged that the planned Palestinian participation was an "infringement of Lebanon's freedom."

Palestinian leaders Zohair Mohsen and Abu Ayad sought to reassure the Christians, saying they will not interfere in election of a new president or the changing of the constitution.

There was speculation that the Christian leaders wanted the Palestinians replaced by Syrian army troops, believing they would be less of a threat to the Christian cause than the Palestinians.

Since the Lebanese Moslems and Christians have demonstrated they will not adhere to a cease-fire without a third party to restrain them, Assad is depending on guerrillas of Yasser Arafat's Palestine Liberation Army and of the Saika Palestinian organization, which Syria finances and controls, to stop the fighting and enforce a truce.

The truce supervisory committee is made up of two Syrian officers along with Lebanese Moslem and Christian representatives and Palestinian representatives. Their chief task is to set up joint patrols of Lebanese and Palestinian soldiers.

Britain's Princess Anne hurt on equestrian course

Associated Press
BLANDFORD, England — Princess Anne's horse fell on her during a riding competition today, briefly knocking her unconscious. She was taken to a hospital, where a preliminary examination showed she suffered a concussion but no broken bones, officials said.

Princess Anne, one of Britain's hopes for an equestrian gold medal at the Montreal Olympics this summer, was riding Candlewick in the Portman horse trials near Blandford when the accident occurred.

A Buckingham Palace spokesman said Anne and the horse fell at the second to last fence of the course and she was unconscious for only a few moments.

Witnesses said Princess Anne's husband, Capt. Mark Phillips, also riding in the event, went to her aid and was with her when she regained consciousness.

Ambulance attendants rushed onto the track and covered her with blankets until an ambulance arrived to take her to the hospital at nearby Poole.

The queen was celebrating her 50th birthday at Windsor Castle.

Israeli troops force curfew on West Bank

Associated Press
JERUSALEM — Israeli troops clamped a curfew on the Arab town of Tulkarm for the second day in a row today as another protest flared against Israel's occupation of Jordan's West Bank.

Mayor Hilmi Hannun predicted the protests would continue as long as Israel keeps its troops on the West Bank and builds Jewish settlements on occupied Arab land.

The curfew was ordered after Arab students scuffled with soldiers and ordered merchants to close the iron shutters of their shops for a business strike.

Most of the West Bank was quiet after a day of scattered anti-Israeli riots.

"There are many soldiers but very few people in the streets," said a doctor in Nablus, a center of recent violence. "The people are afraid to go out."

"Yesterday the soldiers welded shut the doors of some striking shops and painted them with red crosses," Dr. Jamal Hayat, a member of the Nablus town council, said in a telephone interview. "In the last three days I have treated 12 people injured in clashes with the Israelis."

Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin visited Jewish settlers in the occupied territory Tuesday and promised that they would be there a long time, despite Arab protests.

"We have not established any settlement in order to abandon it later," Rabin said Tuesday as Israeli troops wounded two more Arab rioters 15 miles to the west.

"The government which has established these settlements intends to sanction them and wants them to continue to exist for a long time," Rabin declared during a tour of some of the 19 Jewish paramilitary farm communities established in the Jordan Valley since Israel occupied the territory during the 1967 war.

Israeli governments for some years have talked of returning most of the West Bank to Jordan but of retaining a defense line along the Jordan River. Rabin restated this idea, telling the settlers:

"I see the Jordan River line as Israel's security border and the establishment of settlements along this line as the defense line for the state of Israel."

Officials accompanying Rabin said the government might establish five new settlements in the area in the next year.

While Rabin was touring, Israeli troops opened fire on rock-throwing Palestinians in Nablus, the West Bank's biggest town, and wounded two of them. Israeli troops killed one Palestinian and wounded three others during a riot in Nablus on Monday.

The military occupation government put the town of Tulkarm under an all-day curfew after rioters unfurled the flag of the outlawed Palestine Liberation Organization and threw up roadblocks of tires which they set on fire. There were minor riots in Bethlehem, Jenin and East Jerusalem.

Anti-Israeli protests in the West Bank area began two months ago, sparked by establishment of a temporary Jewish settlement near Nablus and an Israeli court decision — later reversed — that Jews could pray in the vicinity of Moslem shrines in East Jerusalem.

The riots subsided before local elections last week in which most of the pro-Hussein moderates were replaced by PLO supporters and other militants. But the Arabs were inflamed again by a two-day march through the West Bank Sunday and Monday by some 40,000 right-wing Jews demanding that Israel annex the territory.

Six Arabs have been killed in the two months of rioting.
