and even go to court to win certain rights that were yours, using your household belongings as evidence. Far-fetched?

It has happened this way at Ozette, a Makah Indian village where four cedar-planked long-houses were buried — and pre-served — by a mudslide that rolled down a bluff more than 300 years

Ozette has been hailed as "North America's Pompeii," "a time cap-sule," "an archeologist's dream." It is helping the Makah descendants of that village reconstruct their history, and establish their ancient right to fish off the Washington coast.

Located on the Pacific Ocean near the rugged, forest-hemmed tip of the Olympic Peninsula, about 150 seal oil they dipped their food in, mats, fish hooks, combs, harpoons, miles west of Seattle, the houses are being excavated under the direction of Dr. Richard D. Daugherty, professor of anthropology at Washington State University.

Daugherty, in his early 40s, and a team of colleagues and archeology students have been there since 1970. They expect to continue five more years

The wet muck, 8 to 12 feet deep, sealed off air, preserving almost ev-erything except flesh, animal skin, and feathers. There is no estimate yet of the number of people buried. The slide may have been triggered by an earthquake, Daugherty says.

The team has recovered and catalogued almost 40,000 artifacts conical rain hats woven of spruce roots, baskets, wooden bowls for the

The Ozette dig has shown that the Makah were a rich and well-fed people with time for art - unlike their descendants today, a tribe of 1,000 that just manages to make a living from fishing. The ancient Makah were seal and whale hunters, occasional slave-owners, weavers of baskets, makers of exquisitely carved boxes, spinners of blanket yarn from dog hair.

A striking item is a whale fin carved of red cedar and inlaid with 700 sea otter teeth.
