Good-bye old... hello new

By GEORGE MASELLI

While graduation day is a happy day for most college students, the same cannot be said of college football coaches. These coaches must accept the fact that players they have nursed and taught the finer points of the game to for four years, move onto a higher level of competition, the real world. To help absorb the transitional shock that comes every year head coach Emory Bellard and assistant coach Melvin Robertson, ease in younger players in favor of the older ones.

Two of these younger players are sophomores Cody Risien and Carl Grulich, who also happen to be friends and roommates. Risien, a very large offensive tackle with a ready smile, got his first start in the Arkansas game after seeing spot duty early in the season. The victim of the youth movement in this case was three year starter Billy Lemons. Risien said, "When I first took the starting job there was some resentment, which is only natural, but Billy now accepts it as part of the game and for the good of the team." Risien has done the job so Lemons stays on the bench.

Grulich also replaced a senior, Reggie Williams, at safety in a defensive backfield that was plagued with breakdowns in coverage that produced two costly, early season defeats at the hands of Houston and Texas Tech. "There's very little difference between him and Reggie, but Carl is younger and all he needs is a little more experience," said defensive boss Robertson.

Grulich, a 6'1", 190 pounder from Richardson, got his first start against Baylor and has been a fixture in the line-up since. "Carl is playing real well, but he still makes a lot of mistakes. He tackles real tough and he's a smart kid, a good athlete," continued Robertson.

Risien and Grulich symbolize the reason why A&M has been being a team that prompts Aggie jokes into a national power. Replacing established players with sophomores shows the program's ability to recruit and organize.

Risien is only one of the solid, young offensive linemen will return next year. Fresh tackle Zach Cuthrie, and guard Pustejovsky and Thomas were all impressed when they saw their chances this season. They also find their way into the lineup eventually until either graduation or the youth movement picks up to them.

In the meantime the team savor its victories over Arkansas, Texas and get ready to take sunny El Paso.
