Writer Wap tries 'historical' Carter walk

By DICK WEST
United Press International
WASHINGTON — A week has passed since Carter stunned the world from the Capitol to the House.

To commemorate the event, I decided to do whether a similar feat could be performed by a citizen. Here is the log.

12:50 p.m. — I set out for historic East Front of the Weather clear. Track last 12:51 p.m. — Trouble into historic Constitution cop on the corner yells at out of the middle of the explain that in order to Carter's inaugural walk I more certain traffic regulate cop threatens to arrest me sonating a foreign diploma 12:57 p.m. — I reach the Capitol Hill and pause to hearings. To my left I can tail of General Grant's horse pointing east. I reason that lowing its nose, I will be westward toward the White 1:03 p.m. — I arrive at where Constitution runs historic Pennsylvania Avenue momentarily confused. CU Ho ahead I can see the tail of field Scott Hancock's horse means I am still headed in direction.

1:12 p.m. — I reach the new FBI building. Heavy traffic makes pedestrian travel backous, but drivers are patriotic. A serving Carter's fuel course policy. They have their car engine turned down to 65.

1:19 p.m. — On a building the street I see a sign for the Postal Service. For some people slow down as they see 1:21 p.m. — The statue Gen. Casimir looms ahead horse's tail first and know on course.

1:23 p.m. — I reach the tion of historic 14th Street in front of me is the Willard Hotel, now a derelict my right towers the historical Press Club bar, whose patrons are pretty too.

1:27 p.m. — At the intersection historic 15th Street, Pennsylvania Avenue abruptly disappears. I assume that Billy Carter and his buddies took it home for an inauguration souvenir.

1:31 p.m. — Whoops! Pennsylvania Avenue, three blocks to the north, the statue of Albert Gallatin. The horse but is glancing over a shoulder. I follow his line and see the White House next block.

1:34 p.m. — Journey's end standing before what is left of the inaugural parade reviewing stand. Reputedly made seven announcements, but now is hobbled and only two remain.

5:37 p.m. — I am filling weekly expense account. $1.50 for cab fare from the White House.

Calhoun's work conf 'overstated'

United Press International
AUSTIN — The problem of teachers not working the hours in the classroom is "grossly overstated," according to Texas A&M vice president.

A House subcommittee received testimony from representatives of the state's major universities opposing a bill that would instruct teachers to spend a number of hours in the classroom to qualify for full pay.

"There is indeed a problem elsewhere that would be as serious or printed in the papers," said John Calhoun, Texas A&M president for academic affairs. "But I think it has been overstated."

"If there is evidence that the state has misused its funds, it ought to be approached on an individual basis instead of this broad requirement."

"I don't know how you can date good administration of a rider or with any rider."

The subcommittee is conducting public hearings on proposed Gov. Dolph Briscoe and the Legislative Budget Board. The committee recommended a nine-hour minimum teacher load for Briscoe proposed a minimum.

"What in the world is it that faculty members object to about 12 hours a week, that they hired out to do isn't it? Rep. Fred Head, D-Austin, said, "Sir, our faculty members work 40 hours a week, and many more," Calhoun responded that the average classroom teacher at A&M was 11 hours per week. Representatives of other colleges said teaching loads of more than 12 hours were
