Games tournament tomorrow

"Fussball is an art. It's a sport, not just a game," says Scott Harris, a third year student at Texas A&M University.
Harris will compete against fustball players from other universities in the Association of College Unions-International Regional Games Tournament tomorrow.
Thirty-one students from A&M will compete in the tournament at Texas Christian University. To qualify, they had to win the campus tournaments held in November and December. These tournaments were open to all A&M students.
Competition will be held in billiards, bowling, bridge, chess, fustball, and table tennis.
Doug Branch, chairman of the Memorial Student Center Recreation Committee, said A&M's strongest areas are fustball, bridge and bowling.
This is the first year the association has included fustball in the tournament. Bob Ennis and Monica Darby will be judged according to the accuracy and distance of their throw.

Winners of the regional tournaments will be invited to the national competitions held later in the spring.
Winning the regionals is an honor, Harris says. When he discovered that the national competition would be held at the Playboy Towers in Chicago, he said he became more enthusiastic about the upcoming games.
The housing and transportation for regional tournaments provided by the MSC. The net get $6 a day for food. The tournaments are paid for by the association.
A&M won't be competing in men's table tennis because the entered the campus tournament. Branch said anyone who entered could have gone to the World as the representative would have been an exciting experience and a paid trip to Fort Worth.

Anthropologist to give two lectures

Leakey to speak on heritage in March

Richard E. Leakey, acclaimed anthropologist and director of the National Museums of Kenya, will present two public lectures March 8 at Texas A&M University.
His 3 p.m. and 8 p.m. presentations in Rudder Auditorium mark his second visit to A&M. His first was in March, 1976, as a visiting professor during the University's centennial year.
Leakey, chairman of the Foundation for Research into the Origins of Man (FROM), will speak on "The Human Heritage," said Dr. Ordean Oyen, A&M anthropologist and member of the foundation's national advisory board.
Leakey's American tour, which includes three other Texas universities, seeks to secure funds for the foundation and support for continued research in East Africa.
Also on Leakey's itinerary are lectures at Texas Tech, University of Texas-El Paso and University of Houston. A&M will be Leakey's first stop after a foundation-sponsored lecture series in California. Plans call for a future series to be held in Texas with A&M serving as scientific headquarters.
Leakey will bring with him a cast model of the controversial Homo erectus skull he claims to be a million years older than any Homo erectus skull was previously thought to be.
Just prior to his 1976 visit to A&M, Leakey announced discovery of the skull which he said was 1.5 million years old. Other authorities had asserted that Homo erectus fossils found in peking dated the find at 350,000 to 500,000 years old.

Among Leakey's other discoveries are a 2 million-year-old Homo habilis skull and the famous 1470 Skull that he contends is proof that early man existed 2.8 million years ago, a million years earlier than previously believed.
Other of his associates in Africa have dated fossils at 3.5 to 3.75 million years old, the oldest reliably dated remains of man's direct ancestors.
Oyen explains that support recently being sought for a project that would have as the center for intensive use of skulls taken from the sites. Such examinations would tend into the medical field.
Leakey, born in Kenya, was in one of the most famous families in the world, the Olduvai Group in Tanzania. He has been either conducting or assisting in research nearly 30 years.
