

James Rosier, biology graduate student in Veterinary Medicine, came back from class to find his car had slid into a drainage ditch. The car precariously hung with one rear tire in the air for nearly three hours. With the help of six friends, Rosier was able to drive the car out of "its parking place."

Black colleges full

United Press International
Ability to attract students is a mark of a healthy college or university.

That being so, the nation's predominantly black private colleges and universities are very healthy.

Consider: Enrollment at the 41 schools in the United Negro College Fund network grew by 7.5 per cent between 1975 and 1976, compared to only 1.9 per cent growth at private colleges and universities nationally.

But that's not all. Measured another way, growth included a tenfold increase in the number of whites studying at the predominantly black Negro College Fund schools between 1969 and 1975.

Alan Kirschner, the fund's director of research, says his new national survey of the colleges, shows them stronger than ever.

This is contrary to predictions that they would die out when black students in the 1960s and early 1970s began to enroll in large numbers in predominantly white colleges and universities.

"Along with the growth of their student population," Kirschner said, "the schools have diversified their curricula to meet the newer distribution of professional job opportunities for blacks."

"More than 17 per cent of all degrees awarded at Negro College

Fund schools in 1975 were in business administration, roughly twice the percentage earned in 1970.

"Twenty-one of the colleges now offer dual-degree engineering programs. Ten years ago, none conferred engineering degrees.

"In 1970 only two of the schools offered degrees in the health professions, compared with 1975 when 14 institutions awarded 213 degrees in health care."

Commenting on these trends, Morris B. Abram, chairman of the United Negro College Fund and former president of Brandeis University, said:

"Government and industry are seeking qualified minority experts in specialized fields, such as engineering and business which were formerly closed to blacks."

"Recognizing this, our students are choosing courses of study with practical applications and fewer students are graduating in the more traditional majors, such as teaching, where the job market has dried up."

The survey also showed that the student-faculty ratio is higher at the United Negro College Fund schools than at other private colleges and universities nationally.

The Negro College Fund schools have one faculty member for every 14.1 students. The average nationally: one for 16.4 students.

One thing the schools have in common with all others: financial problems. The survey showed expenditures going up faster than income.

Between 1971 and 1975, total revenues increased by 32.6 per cent. Expenditures went up 37.3 per cent.

Ammonia forces school evacuation

FORT HANCOCK, Tex. (UPI) — A pickup truck towing a small tank of liquid ammonia fertilizer overturned yesterday on state highway 20, spilling 250 gallons of the toxic chemical and forcing the temporary evacuation of a high school.

There were no reports of injuries. Fort Hancock High School was evacuated while the spill was cleaned up.

The DPS said the pickup and trailer apparently overturned on a gravel driveway. The driver was not injured.
