

Tarleton State offers horse management degree

Tarleton State University's one-year, full-time degree program in horse management will see its first graduates in late 1978 or 1979, said Dr. Les Waymack, program director and a champion rodeo rider. The program has just received the official sanction of the Coordinating Board of the Texas College and University System. This four-year program is "the first major of its kind in the field of agriculture," said Dr. W. H. Newell, head of TSU's department of agriculture. The reward for this rigorous program is a Bachelor of Science in Agriculture with a major in horse production and science. Immediate implementation of the program comes on the heels of official sanctions by the Texas A&M University Board of Regents (headed by Granbury and Fort Worth businessman Clyde H. Wells) and the Coordinating Board. Wells said that "this type of program for horse husbandry will fit right in at Tarleton. Students already are oriented toward livestock from their heritage and their rodeo participation. There will be a four-stall stallion barn and accommodations for 16 mares and foals used in the program.
