'Goldie Oldies' back, may cost stash of cash

United Press International
NEW YORK — If you collect rock and roll records and the words "original label" or "limited pressing" interest you, you could become an oldies junkie.

But be careful, the habit can be expensive. Most older singles usually sell for under $10, but if you wanted to pick up an early Elvis Presley single such as "Good Rockin' Tonight" on the Sun label from Nashville, about $275 would have to cross the table. "Teach Me Tonight" by The Five Dips would cost $200 and "Stormy Weather" by The Five Sharps would set you back a cool $1,000.

Of course you wouldn't let even the best diamond stylus come anywhere near these gems. You would want to keep them in a plastic bag, in that virginal condition we call mint, to show to your friends and, of course, to rival collectors.

The bulk of today's collectors are not nostalgia buffs. Many of them are too young to have much to be nostalgic about. The typical collector is between 17 and 25 and many times was not even born when the song he paid $10 for was originally recorded.

Rock and roll is not dead. It is, as the song goes, here to stay. Hard core purists are keeping it alive at collectors' prices.
