Time again for football

By NATHAN HINES
Believe it or not, it's football season. I know that we just started baseball and track, but football is starting, or at least for the Aggies and all of the other Southwest Conference (SWC) football teams.

This season is not one full of festive football weekends, with midnight yell practices and the big game on Saturday, but one of pain, hard work, sore muscles and lots and lots of sweat. This is the season for spring training, and it gets in to full swing next Tuesday, with the Ags getting their first feel of full pads since beating the University of Florida.

The weeks leading up to spring training have not been any more fun for the football team than spring training will be. These weeks have been for conditioning. This conditioning has come in the form of running, lifting weights, running and more running.

When Coach Emory Bellard was asked about spring training he said the two main purposes behind spring training are to teach, and to get a good idea of where people will play.

"Spring training is the perfect place and time to look at all your personnel and work individually with each person," Coach Bellard said. "The players go all out for themselves and earn a starting position on the team. Spring training is the only time we can have contact and scrimmages during the regular season because of the pressure on the team to stay healthy during the regular season."

"This does not mean to say we try to hurt people in spring training, but that if they do get an injury that keeps them out for days, it will not hurt the team during a game."

When asked about the health of the teams, Coach Bellard said that we will run the offense and defense as well as we can year and no drastic changes are expected.

When asked about the health of the teams, Coach Bellard said it was real good, and that Guthrie was the only one who would miss all of spring training. Guthrie, a freshman, was with a knee injury during the game last year and is recovering from surgery. Coach Bellard says he is covering very well and is at full strength before the season starts.

The schedule for spring training will be practice every day a week at four p.m. except for Saturdays and Mondays, with scrimmages on Saturdays. He invited everyone to watch practice and scrimmages because the support helps the morale.

Coach Bellard said, "The very well be the most important spring training we have ever had at Texas A&M."
