

Olympian to run in relays

United Press International
LAWRENCE, KAN. — Four-time Olympic gold medalist Al Oerter will compete in his first major meet in eight years to highlight a studded field this weekend at the 22nd running of the Kansas Relays.

He has already competed in two minor meets this month and has carted away two first place finishes with throws of 197 feet and 199 feet, 8 inches.

"I've developed a comprehensive program for myself which puts equal stress on weight training and flexibility," explained the 6-foot-4, 270-pound Oerter. "When I originally started last year, I planned to continue with the program through this summer but I've rounded into shape sooner than I thought I would."

"I hadn't planned to compete this year, but I'm at a point now when it's the best thing for me."

It might also be the best thing for the Kansas Relays because meet officials expect a crowd between 12,000 and 15,000, weather permitting. Oerter will be one of several gate attractions.

There will also be six members of the 1976 U.S. Olympic team, including Texas freshman Johnny Jones who ran a 9.85 in the 100 meters two weeks ago at the Texas Relays, only to have the time washed out because of a faulty electronic timer.

Also competing will be Olympic pole vaulters Earl Bell and Terry Porter, Olympic distance runner Garry Bjorklund formerly of the University of Minnesota, and sub-four minute milers Mike Slack and Mike Manke.

The meet, the second jewel in the Midwest Triple Crown, will run from Thursday through Saturday. Most of the athletes will then head for Des Moines next weekend for the third leg of the Triple Crown, the Drake Relays.
