Sprinters gather at Drake Relays

By PAUL McGRATH
The Texas A&M track team, including newcomer Curtis Dickey, heads for Des Moines, Iowa today for the 37th running of the Drake Relays. The Relays, hosted by Drake University, will be highlighted by a stellar field of sprinters.

Texas' Johnny "Lam" Jones and Auburn's Harvey Glance, both Olympic medalists, will receive most of the spotlight because of their exploits in the 100-meter dash earlier this spring.

Jones ran a 9.85 in the century race at the Texas Relays and then a week later Glance ran a 9.75. Both times were under the world record of 9.95 held by Jim Hines, but because each race was timed by hand, neither is official. Ironically, the electronic timers malfunctioned in both races.

Glance will also anchor Auburn's 880-yard relay team which has a shot of breaking Texas A&M's American record of 1:21.7. Jones will anchor Texas' sprint relay quartet which has the best time in the Southwest Conference this year, 39.77. Oklahoma, which won the sprint relay at the Texas and Kansas Relays, is looking for a sweep in this, the third meet of the Triple Crown of collegiate track.

Arkansas' Niall O'Shaughnessy, the diminutive miler from Ireland, will be seeking to crack the four-minute barrier, a feat that has never been accomplished at Drake. O'Shaughnessy ran a 3:55.4 anchor leg for the Razorbacks' four mile relay unit at Texas.

Glance and Jones will not be the only Olympians present. Mac Wilkens, a gold medal winner at Montreal, will compete in the discus and go against Al Fuerbach in the shot put.

Kenyan Mike Boit will go head to head with Chicago insurance salesman Rick Wolhuter in the 800-meter race. Although Wolhuter holds the American record, he and Boit will have to contend with Kelley Marsh of Ball State. Marsh won the 1,000-yard run at the NCAA indoor meet and is undefeated as a collegian. Marathon ace Frank Shorter will compete in the 5,000-meter run and the nation's top woman distance runner, Francie Larrieu Lutz will defend her title in the 1,500-meters.

Bruce Jenner, who set a world record in the decathlon at Montreal, will be on the sidelines as marshal of the annual Relays parade.

The Aggies of Coach Charles Thomas will run teams in the sprint, sprint medley, mile, two-mile, 880-yard and distance medley relays.

Dickey will anchor the sprint relay, Thomas said, and may also run on the 880-yard relay foursome. Chuck Butler, Ray Brooks, Phillip Steen and Shifton Baker will participate in the 1,500-meter race. Baker will also run in the intermediate hurdles.

Tony Wheeler, Jim Tom Glass and Joel Vesper will be expected to form the two-unit. Manfred Kohrs and Tom Glass will run in the 1,500-meter race. Frank West, Tim Scott and Craig Carter will be in the shot put and discus. Steve Stewart entered on discus.

Lyn Byrd, Ron Key and Jerry Riggins will participate in the jump. Brad Blair, Pat Blum and Jerry Strong are slated for vault.

Strangely enough, while the early pick to win the outdoor meet in mid-May, Blair, leads the SWC specialty. West is second in the discus, while Baker leads in both hurdles races.

The preliminaries for the Relays will start tomorrow with the finals scheduled for day afternoon.

Following the Relays, the track team will be off to May 5 for a quadrangular meet then go to the SWC meet 13-14.

Randle with Mets

United Press International
NEW YORK — The market for Lenny Randle had dwindled to practically nothing. A couple of clubs which had been interested previously, to a degree, anyway, backed off after his assault on Frank Lucchesi a month ago.

They were afraid of the negative publicity that would follow if they took on Randle because after all, some sense of law and order still prevails among most people in the land and how much approval can you reasonably expect for picking up a ballplayer who goes and beats up the manager because of losing the second base job to someone else?

The Mets figured they'd take a chance.

Their pitchers have been hollering for a hitter so much, any kind of hitter to help big Dave Kingman, the Mets felt they have nothing to lose. They haven't been going well so badly, they're willing to risk whatever criticism follows by adding someone like Randle, who hit .224 for the Texas Rangers last year.

In giving up a chunk of cash, which they can certainly spare, plus a player to be named later, who doesn't figure to be much, the Mets are dealing for what they hope will turn out to be an entirely different Lenny Randle. They're hoping all the publicity over his attack on Lucchesi eventually will die down and that a change of leagues will bring out in him something closer to the .304 he hit for the Rangers three years ago. Nothing wrong with hoping, is there?

Randle's departure from the Rangers, one day before his 30-day suspension with them was up, came shortly before he surrendered to police in Tempe, Ariz., Tuesday on an Orange County, Fla., warrant charging him with aggravated battery on Lucchesi. If convicted, he could draw 15 years in the slammer, a $10,000 fine, or both.

The Ranger players learned Randle had gone to the Mets shortly after arriving in Kansas City from Arlington, Tex., for a two-game series with the Royals. None of them were shocked. They all were aware he wasn't going to play with the Rangers anymore.

One of those who knows Randle as well as anybody is Toby Harrah, the Rangers' shortstop. Everybody likes Toby Harrah because he's a straight kind of guy, exceptionally open and sincere. He has a genuine friendly way about him and it was perfectly natural that a fellow like Lenny Randle, or anybody else with the Rangers for that matter, would naturally gravitate toward him. Frank Lucchesi likes Toby Harrah, too.

The night after Randle had the trouble in Orlando last month, Harrah had dinner with him.

"He knows I didn't agree with him with what he did, but he also knows I wouldn't turn my back on him," said the Rangers' shortstop when he heard Randle had gone to the Mets. "All of us on the club agreed that you just don't hit an older person like that. I felt sorry to see the whole thing happen between Frank and Lenny."

"I enjoyed playing baseball with Lenny. He always has been a ballplayer who minded his business and hustled his way always tries so hard. Lenny actually is an easy person to like. He's a very proud individual, never seen him give up, regardless of the circumstances."

None of the Rangers can specifically provoke a reaction against Lucchesi.

"A lot of pressure seems to be building up inside him for three weeks before that he seemed to come to a head. Harrah. "Lenny isn't one anything in. He'll confront a very proud person."

Harrah said he hoped "has learned something the whole thing" and that he was involved in ultimately be forgotten.

"I talked to him the night happened and I know he was said Harrah. "He was shocked. Now that he's with them, he'll help the Mets if they can play left field, and he's to embarrass you at the plate. He likes to play baseball."
