Kashmere duo still waiting

After 14 months of apprehension, dread and uncertainty Karl Godine and Jarvis Williams still don't know if they're eligible for the coming basketball season.

The Aggie program they participated in was placed on a one-year probation by the NCAA, yet remains eligible for future SWC championships and post-season play.

The NCAA also said that Texas A&M was required to sever all relations with persons who violated recruiting rules. A SWC ad hoc committee named I.S. Feinstein, Wesley Boyd and George Gilliam as the men who aided in the recruitment of Godine and Williams.

Feinstein refused comment, but Gilliam had strong remarks about the ruling.

"I denied the charges a year ago, and I deny them today," the owner of a Houston furniture store said. "The whole thing was politically motivated to start with."

Gilliam was reportedly accused of paying Godine and Williams large sums of money when they worked at his store. Boyd, a junior high school coach in Houston, supposedly handled the recruiting of the Houston Kashmere stars.

Coach Shelby Metcalf defended the three Houstonians. He felt that the cases against the men had long been disproven.

"I swore to secrecy about the case and can't comment upon it," the Aggie coach said. "One day I will write a book, and it should make some interesting reading."

The disturbing note about the whole ordeal is that the NCAA has yet to act upon the most important fact. . . Godine's and Williams' eligibility. In the melee of decisions the two men have been forgotten.

This is the sad chapter of the confusing book. The NCAA, and coaches and fans of Aggieland, are more interested in the fate of a sport, than they are in the fate of two men.

No one seems interested that these men have experienced an agonizing year of worry and doubt; only the fact of how severe a penalty the gods of the NCAA would bestow upon us.

The rights of two men have been violated, but all anyone cares about is whether or not the Ags will play in the Summit next March.

Godine and Williams have been denied their right to a speedy trial by an outdated NCAA committee. The men were accused of accepting illegal monetary gifts, and were finally allowed to present their defense of these accusations a year later.

Meanwhile, the Kashmere duo lost a year of eligibility in college basketball, and lived a year in wonderment of the future.

The rights of players should not be disregarded just because they participate in an organized college sport. Too long have college players succumbed to the wishes of NCAA committees.

These committees are not required to present any evidence why a decision is reached. Players, coaches and alumni have no recourse to prove their innocence, if the NCAA says they're guilty. . .

The guilty verdict was issued by the NCAA in the case of A&M the NCAA. The sentence was on the hand and a promise that will be good boys for one year. . .

No verdict was issued by the NCAA in the case of Godine and Williams vs. the NCAA. The sentence was. . . waiting for the dict.
