It Happened In Texas by BILL LEFTWICH

1776: "Hunting the Wild Bull" was a sport of Spanish Cavalrymen stationed in the Texas Gulf Coast area where raising Longhorn cattle was the only occupation of the colonists. In this natural cattle-breeding country, Longhorns thrived, increased and ran wild.

Heroine of Spanish civil war could be new parliament head

United Press International
MADRID, Spain — Parliament speaker Torcuato Fernandez-Miranda announced his resignation today, making it possible for Spain's new parliament to be headed briefly by Communist party chief Dolores Ibaruri when it convenes for the first time next month.
The 81-year-old Mrs. Ibaruri, "La Pasionaria" of the civil war who returned from 40 years of exile in Moscow earlier this month, is the oldest of the candidates running in the June 15 elections for parliament.
Constitutional experts say that if she is elected, she would be the senior member of the new parliament and, as such, becomes its acting president. King Juan Carlos could prevent this by designating a new speaker before the election.
Political sources believe Juan Carlos will pick a new speaker before the first session of parliament to avoid the controversy and embarrassment brought about by "La Pasionaria" occupying the speaker's chair.
Fernandez-Miranda told a news conference that he handed his resignation to King Juan Carlos eight days ago and that he definitely did not want to be the speaker of the new Cortes.
He said the King accepted the resignation Monday, but asked him to stay on until the elections.
Under the Franco-era constitution, the speaker of parliament is appointed to a five-year term by the King. Fernandez-Miranda's term was to run until 1980.
His resignation apparently was influenced by widespread demands by political parties that the new Spanish parliament, like most Western legislatures, picks its own president or has a president sending a parliamentary message to the King and was vice president under the assassinated Premier Carrero Blanco.
Although a man of the Franco regime, he was instrumental in getting the parliament to appoint Premier Adolfo Suarez's government toward democracy.

Poor maintenance cited for explosion

United Press International
HOUSTON — Federal occupational health officials Tuesday cited Texaco for alleged safety violations at a Port Arthur, Tex., refinery where a March 17 explosion and fire fatally injured eight employees.
Texaco had no immediate comment, but sources said the company would contest the citation within the 15-day time limit.
The main Occupational Safety and Health Administration complaint was failure to conduct tests to detect combustible vapors before allowing maintenance work on Stabilizer Unit No. 1, where the explosion and fire occurred.
Other complaints included alleged improper construction of combustible liquid tanks and piping and unsafe ladders, stairs and railings.
"We don't have any statement this afternoon," company spokesman Ben Fortson said. "It will have to be gone over."
Twenty-six workers were injured when three explosions and fire shook the 150-foot stabilizer unit where more than 100 maintenance employees were doing refurbishing work.
Twenty-two were hospitalized with burns and other injuries.

Scientist predicts era of more coal burning

United Press International
WASHINGTON — Columbia University scientists warned yesterday the nation is about to enter an unprecedented era of coal burning to meet energy needs without knowing what the effect will be.
The concern, Dr. Wallace Broecker said, is that carbon dioxide added to the air from coal combustion will act like a greenhouse, keeping some of Earth's heat from escaping into space. This will cause atmospheric temperatures to rise.
Broecker's statements were made in a report to the American Geophysical Union.
This has long been a recognized phenomenon of burning fossil fuels, but Broecker said the greenhouse effect is one hazard which has received little attention during current debate over sources of energy.
"We cannot afford to discuss this long term consequence of energy," he said.
Broecker, a geochemist at Columbia's Lamont-Doherty Geological Observatory, said if the rate of several per cent per year during the latter half of the century, the carbon dioxide of the atmosphere will be double what it was in 1900.
Broecker said recent studies suggest the resulting greenhouse effect would raise the atmospheric temperature by 4 degrees Fahrenheit. But he said scientists have a reliable way to predict the changes in rain and snow in various regions of Earth.
"Thus, we are about to launch into the era of coal burning without knowing where it will lead," he said.

Institute to educate teachers

Texas A&M University's fourth annual American Economy Institute begins June 6. The institute is a four-week program for public school teachers who teach principles of free enterprise.
The institute was established to provide aid for teachers in fulfilling a state requirement that public school teach basic free enterprise economics courses, said its director, economic prof Dr. John W. Allen.
The Economics and Educational Curriculum and Instruction departments direct the program, with additional speakers from industry and government.
Support for the institute comes from the Texas Bureau for Economic Understanding and Invest-in-America National Council Inc., allowing participants to attend free of charge. A housing allowance for out-of-town teachers is also provided.
Teachers can earn five hours of graduate credit and the institute is open to all public school teachers who hold a baccalaureate degree.
The clinic is offered by the English Department in cooperation with the Continuing Education Office. A $30 fee is charged for appraisal, participation in the sessions and subsequent individual guidance.
Pope said the program is presented as part of the College of Liberal Arts' continuing education program. Persons need not be enrolled in Texas A&M to attend. No degree credit is given, but continuing education units are awarded for the program.
