Reorganization plans made for maritime, vet schools

Texas A&M University requests for reorganizing portions of its Moody College of Marine Sciences and Maritime Resources at Galveston and the College of Veterinary Medicine were approved Friday by the Coordinating Board, Texas College and University System.
The name of the Galveston institution was formally shortened to Moody College, and the School of Marine Technology was authorized as one of its three component units.
Dr. William H. Clayton, Moody College superintendent, noted that the name under which the college has been operating was designed to emphasize both the "marine" and "maritime" aspects at the time of its founding in 1971.
"This dual concept is now well recognized and the college firmly established in its respective fields," he added, "and the long designation is cumbersome and somewhat redundant."
The current Department of Marine Sciences was redesignated the School of Marine Technology. It will include the Departments of Marine Sciences, Maritime Biology, Maritime Systems Engineering, and General Academics.
Changes approved by the Coordinating Board did not affect Moody College's other two major components, the Coastal Zone Laboratory and the Texas Maritime Academy, other than transferring the General Academics Department from the academy to the newly designated school.
In matters pertaining to Texas A&M's College of Veterinary Medicine, the Coordinating Board approved the university's request to separate one department into two and merge two others.
The Department of Veterinary Medicine and Surgery will be divided into the Department of Large Animal Medicine and Surgery and the Department of Small Animal Medicine and Surgery.
The Department of Veterinary Microbiology and the Department of Veterinary Parasitology were merged into a single unit known as the Department of Veterinary Microbiology and Parasitology.

Researchers given $46 million in aid

Researchers at Texas A&M University received almost $46 million in aid during the first nine months of the current fiscal year as the amount of money received inched towards another record-setting total.
Cumulative for the first nine months is already $45,854,724, a tabulation exceeded only by the 12-month total of $47,014,844 for the record 1975-76 period.
University Research Director Dr. Robert Berg said the current amount moved into the second-highest slot following the award of $2,612,998 in support during May. Assistance to researchers is more than $6 million ahead of the same time last year and nearly $1 million in front of the first nine months of 1974-75, he explained.
The College of Agriculture and Texas Agricultural Experiment Station shared a total of $982,731 in aid given during May. The College of Geosciences received $689,102, College of Science, $582,402, College of Engineering, Texas Transportation Institute and Texas Engineering Experiment Station, total of $356,162; College of Veterinary Medicine, $1,366; and College of Liberal Arts, $516.
