

Training school personnel to help grapple with Anita

Personnel and equipment of the Firemen's Training School (FTS) headed for South Texas yesterday morning with disaster relief assistance against Hurricane Anita. Chief Henry D. Smith said yesterday the men and equipment will be under state disaster relief control when they reach Kingsville. Texas Engineering Extension Service Director James R. Bradley said FTS participation is organized through the state Disaster Plan directed by the governor. Aid to stricken areas is controlled through the Department of Public Safety's Division of Disaster Emergency Services. Thirty-two state agencies, including FTS and the Texas Forest Service, are programmed to provide aid, if requested by the state.

Among 32 state agencies pooling disaster relief against Hurricane Anita is the Fire Protection Training Division of the Texas Engineering Extension Service. Equipment and personnel from the Firemen's Training School headed for South Texas yesterday morning.

Chief Smith, division head, and Tom Robinson, John Rauch and Jack Sneed of the FTS staff will be at the emergency operations center in Austin. "Our people, filled out with crews from area cities not endangered on a mutual aid plan, will deploy from Kingsville to wherever they are needed, as directed by the state center," Smith said. Two-thirds of the FTS staff, with six pieces of Fire School equipment, reported in at Kingsville. They departed at 11:15 a.m. yesterday with two 1,000 gallon engines, a salvage-rescue unit, a four-wheel drive booster for rescue operations and two four-wheel drive pickups with extra gear, supplies, fuel and water. FTS oil spill-hazardous materials control personnel and equipment is on standby, Chief Smith said. All unassigned personnel are on 24-hour call. The FTS crews have support responsibility in the disaster plan for search and rescue, fire suppression and structural safety.

Bride's dad ushers her to court

United Press International HAYS, Kan. — Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Weilert oppose the wedding of their daughter Ruth, 20, and Phillip D. Miller, 21, and they want everyone to know about it. The Weilerts filed a $10,000 suit against their daughter and her future mother-in-law, Mrs. James Miller, but it is not likely to come to court until after the wedding scheduled for Saturday. The suit was filed because the Weilerts' names were on the wedding invitations despite their objections. Also, Weilert never received an invitation list so he could explain to his friends why his and his wife's names were included against their wishes. A hearing was set for Wednesday, but all of those involved failed to appear so no immediate action was taken. A deputy has been unable to locate the daughter to serve a summons and it is "almost impossible" the hearing can be held before the wedding. Weilert said his daughter and Mrs. Miller had agreed earlier not to include the Weilerts' names on the invitations. "I wanted to teach them a lesson," he said. "Right is right, wrong is wrong, and love comes third if that is what it is." In addition to the $10,000 damages, the Weilerts have asked the court to order their daughter and

Mrs. Miller to notify everyone receiving an invitation that the Weilerts' names should not be included. "My wife and I haven't consented to the marriage and didn't really know about it until last week," Weilert said. However, Weilert, father of 12, said he realized the wedding was going to happen. "If they had gone about it the right way, I told them I would pay $1,000 of the marriage, send them to college and pay all their expenses on a house and groceries and buy them a car," he said.
