Wallflowers pull together

By BEVERLY MANJEOT
Dateless Friday nights are no longer heartbreakers for a group of Keathley residents belonging to the exclusive "No Data Beta" club.
The club is a new unrecognized organization on the Texas A&M campus with nine regular members and three 'pledges'.

"This year's goal is to try and uphold the tradition of achieving at least one date during the course of the year. Our second goal is to eat, drink and be married," said Rani Mays, a brunette junior and spokeswoman for the group.
"One date is all we want," said sophomore Debo "Dumbo"

Kocurek, who is still looking for a date.
Pledges wearing bright "No Data Beta" t-shirts are visible for delivering cocktail parties to the club's regular members.
Each week the members entertain the club's choreographed versions of "Nasty," a dance similar to the tle.
Mandatory reading material for the group includes "True Love," "Modern Romance," but some secretly admit they prefer "Playgirl."

Plans are being made by the club to take out a full page of year's AggieLand and the participating in the Greek Festival.
"I kid about being the best because I have the least dates, but it wasn't a joke the body ever had them," said Mohnkern, one of the organizers for the group.
The idea caught on as Mohnkern's other dates when she and her roommate Mays started wearing the "Data Beta" t-shirts to Shisler Hall. The girls received the birthday presents from their friends.
Cocktail party chatter around the idea of letting the club and making it a combination between a sorority and fraternity.

"That would solve all our problems," said Mohnkern.
Linda Thompson, another "Data Beta" regular, answered phone during a recent partying, "Good evening . . . Affairs . . . Would you like to call, Karen Switzer, assistant director of Student Affairs. This is student affairs."
Switzer was then invited to the next party.

Radiation class for industries to begin here

Houston Lighting and Company and Texas A&M University are teaming up to produce the first class of industrial radiation specialists.
Under a grant from HARP, A&M's Nuclear Engineering department will provide laboratory training in health physics to the company's employees, according to Dr. Richard Neff, professor of clear engineering and nuclear radiological safety officer.

"Texas A&M will provide the equipment necessary for conducting the experiments and will provide instructors so that each will be given adequate supervision and instruction," Dr. Neff explained. "Laboratory equipment will be at the Nuclear Engineering Laboratories in the Zachry Engineering Center and at the Science Center reactor."
"We've had a degree program in radiation protection engineering, but this is the first time we've had people from industry," he continued. "They're coming because Texas A&M has the advanced laboratories in this country, the latest equipment, two reactors."

The classes for the 10 students begin Nov. 14 and will be held in three one-week sessions. The group will be the first for the South Texas Project, Texas' first nuclear power plant. They will operate nuclear equipment for the evaluation of radioactivity and radiation near where people will be working.

Volunteer Festival to acquaint students with local agencies
A "Volunteer Festival," a quaint Texas A&M student service opportunity in local agencies, is planned Wednesday, Sept. 14.
Representatives of agencies will be on hand in the University Mall from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. to assist in planning the festival to Denise Prihoda.

Prihoda chairs Student Volunteer Services, a Student Affairs program that acts in a liaison capacity with community agencies and needs volunteer aid.
SVS placed 100 students in its first existence. "We're expanding, and help more student agencies," Prihoda said.
Invited to participate in the volunteer festival are organizations such as the Brazos Valley Health-Mental Retardation Center, Bryan Hospital, Brazos Rehabilitation Center, Sweetbriar Home, March of Dimes, the County Humane Society, and Planned Parenthood, among others.
"This way, students can about their programs without making a major commitment of getting to them for information," SVS chairman said. The festival includes students who have previously volunteered.
"Texas A&M students do a variety of reasons," Prihoda said. "It might be for the self-interest of helping others, for credit or experience in a field they plan to enter."
