Southerland named co-op ed. director

J. Malon Southerland has been named director of cooperative education at Texas A&M University according to an announcement by Dr. J. M. Prescott, vice president for academic affairs. He will direct the university-wide program from the center in the Rudder Tower.

At the same time he will retain partial responsibilities as associate director of the Career Planning and Placement center.

The College of Engineering has operated such a program since 1963, allowing students to alternate semesters of work with semesters of academic studies. It now includes more than 600 students.

Six of Texas A&M's colleges, initially, will be active in the program. They are agriculture, architecture and environmental design, engineering, liberal arts, science and veterinary medicine. Each will have a college coordinator of cooperative education.

Broadening of the cooperative education concept grew out of a

Placement Advisory Council recommendation in 1976 to then Academic Vice President Dr. John C. Calhoun Jr. A committee including representatives from each college supported it.

An $80,000 grant from the Office of Education, Department of Health, Education and Welfare, will help initiate the program along with the university's funding commitment. The grant was obtained through efforts of Dr. Charles Rodenberger, committee chairman.

A 1965 graduate, Southerland has worked in career planning and placement with Director Louis Van Pelt since 1974. He was coordinator of educational placement services, and became associate director last year. In his nine years on the university staff, Southerland has been assistant to the commandant of cadets for four years. He holds degrees from Texas A&M in management and educational administration.

The most significant change would authorize the Commission to suspend from office judges and justices under indictment.
