HUNTER, former H. of murder in ing of a Mexica. says the entire in. sult of good intent. Terry Denson, 27, Monday he did not pus. pos Torres, 23, into Buffalo. two other former officers invo. the incident have said. "He jumped off into the water," Denson said. Denson, the first defense witness, and former officer Stephen Orlando, 21, are accused of murdering Torres May 6 after a barroom disturbance arrest. Three other officers also were fired. Former officers Glenn Brinkmeyer and Louis Kinney were granted immunity for testifying and said Denson and Orlando helped beat Torres to "educate" him and that Denson pushed him off a 16-foot bayou ledge. Denson stepped from the witness box and re-enacted for the jury how he held Torres at the edge. Denson said Torres lurched and leaped into the water. "Did you push him into the bayou?" defense attorney Bob Bennett asked. "No, sir. I didn't," Denson said. Denson said he made no attempt to help Torres from the water because he thought Torres "was in full control." He said Torres was swimming on his back when he yelled up at police. "You're not going to shoot me, are you?" Denson said he replied, "No, you've gotten away. You're free to go." Denson said he did not realize it was Torres who had been found in the bayou two days later. "I don't feel it was my conduct that resulted in his death. It didn't dawn on me it could possibly be (Torres, when Denson saw television reports). "I had no inclination at all that this was going to happen," Denson said. "I was just going to take him down there and scare him and see if he was going to straighten up and let him go about his business. Denson said rowdies arrested on drunkenness or disturbance complaints often were taken to secluded spots to be calmed down. He said the drunks usually "apologize" after such handling and often are not taken to jail. Last week Harris County Medical Examiner Joseph Jachimczyk testified Torres was too drunk and encumbered by heavy boots and other clothing to swim after the beating.

Rapist walks away from jail

United Press International
HOUSTON — A convicted rapist sentenced to life imprisonment apparently walked away from the downtown jail unchallenged, Harris County Sheriff's deputies said Tuesday. Daniel K. Johnson, 32, convicted Friday of raping a 24-year-old airline stewardess April 14, was sentenced Monday in District Judge Joe Kegan's court, taken to jail and then disappeared. Deputies said Johnson, unshackled and dressed in civilian clothes, apparently took advantage of jail booking area crowding and deputies' shift change to walk out of the jail unnoticed. "There were probably 60 or 70 prisoners in there in the hallway," Maj. Bob Breckenridge said. "Because of the high traffic in the booking area and because it was a shift change, there's a strong indication he blended in with others in his street clothes and walked out the door." Breckenridge said Johnson also is wanted under a different name in Illinois on charges of rape, burglary and escaping from jail in 1974.
