Beer, food may be cheaper near A&M

It pays to shop around. Sometimes prices are cheaper at stores near campus, and sometimes they can be cheaper at stores near residential areas.
Beer, a popular item which some students contend is a necessity of life, is about two cents cheaper close to campus than far away. Of seven beers priced, four are cheaper close to campus.
A recent sampling of prices shows that of seven meat products in six major food stores, five are cheaper in stores close to campus than in those far away. The five cuts total 50 cents cheaper per pound. Round steak averages $1.52 in stores far from campus and $1.29 in stores close to campus. Beef rib eye steak is 24 cents cheaper close to campus. This is the largest difference in sampled meat prices between stores.
But not all food prices are cheaper near campus. Stores located near residential areas average three to four cents cheaper on dairy products, cereals, canned fruits and canned vegetables. And of course prices may change from one day to another.

Double up, America.

Canine thief panics bus riders

United Press International
CINCINNATI — "The passengers were screaming... in a state of panic," Queen City Metro bus driver Eugene Davis said. "Frankly, I was scared too."
The uproar was caused by a purse-snatching bulldog.
Despite the panic, bus riders foiled two attempts Friday by the alleged canine thief.
Police said the dog jumped on the bus while it was stopped, darted to the rear and grabbed a purse. Other riders yanked it away from the dog, but the animal snatched a second purse. It too was retrieved.
Before police could apprehend the animal, the dog ran from the bus and disappeared into a nearby yard.
