Crime amendment No bail for bad guys

United Press International
AUSTIN, Tex.—Up to 40 percent of the robberies and home burglaries in Harris County are committed by persons who already have been charged with one or more felonies, a Houston senator contends.

A proposed constitutional amendment backed by that senator — Sen. Jack Ogg, D-Houston — would permit judges to deny bail to persons charged with one felony while they are free on bail on another felony charge.

The proposed amendment will be submitted to Texas voters in a special election Nov. 8, and is the third of seven amendments listed on a statewide ballot.

The Texas Civil Liberties Union and some defense attorneys oppose the amendments on the grounds that the right to bail is constitutional and guaranteed.

"We'll be opposing it as a violation of the 8th amendment," said John Duncan, executive director of the ACLU. "We'll put out press statements in opposition to it, but we're not going to spend money to campaign against it."

Ogg disputes the argument that the proposal violates the constitutional guarantee of bail. He said the proposal would merely provide a second exception to the bail guarantee. He says the provision is necessary to combat crime, particularly in urban areas.

"The statistics are pretty alarming in urban areas such as Houston where as much as 30 to 40 percent of the robberies and home burglaries are committed by people already out on one or more bonds," Ogg said.

"The amendment would give a discretion to a judge to deny bail to repeat and professional offenders. In essence, I don't think the framers of the constitution intended the right to bail to go to people who were charged with committing one or more crimes at the same time."

Under the provision, if a judge denies bail, the defendant is entitled to a full hearing on it, and is entitled to an immediate appeal directly to the Court of Criminal Appeals. The appeal is then given priority consideration.
