MIA wives upset with Mondale

United Press International
TOPEKA, Kan. — A representative of wives of missing servicemen Sunday said she was disappointed with Vice President Walter Mondale's reaction to their situation.

Mondale Sunday departed from a standard political campaign visit to meet with members of the National League of Families to discuss administration policies on reclassifying servicemen missing in action in Southeast Asia.

Mondale, in Kansas to endorse the re-election bid of Rep. Martha Keys, D-Kan., spoke at a barbecue and fund raiser for the second term congresswoman. In addition, at the intercession of the congresswoman, Mondale agreed to meet with three women representing the league.

Mondale and Keys spokesmen did not comment on the content of the closed door meeting with Kay

Bosiljevac of Omaha, Neb., Connie Acten of Topeka and Cammie Pugh of Salina, Kan. However, as the barbecue progressed inside, Mrs. Bosiljevac told 17 other MIA protestors that the brief conversation with Mondale was not encouraging.

"I'd say it was very nice meeting," she said. "He seems to be a nice man, but it looks like the policies will stay the same."

Mrs. Bosiljevac, whose husband is missing in Southeast Asia, said she relayed her concerns to the vice president that missing servicemen merely would be declared dead, and then be forgotten under a new policy which she said President Carter approved. She said the group is concerned about the government's plan to review each missing person's case individually and determine its status, possibly changing the classification from missing to dead.

Political decisions on 'right to food' debate

Views from religious leaders and American agricultural producers on the "Right to Food" issue were presented last week at the Annual Town and Country Church Conference at Texas A&M University.

Both Rev. Arthur Simon, executive director of the Bread for the World organization, and Allan Grant, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, agreed that the effort to provide food to hungry people throughout the world depends primarily on "political will."

"Hunger is a public policy issue," said Simon, whose organization advocates the involvement of the ordinary citizen in shaping governmental policies related to feeding the hungry. "By silence on public policy, we are actually driving people deeper and deeper into hunger. We must make our voices heard on policy relating to the world food and hunger situation."

"Political will is the key to dealing with the world hunger situation," he said. "Offering time, ability and influence as a citizen to bring about political changes will solve the world food problem."

Simon noted that Bread for the World now has some 20,000 members and is working toward helping people of this country use their citizenship more effectively. He said that the organization attempts to draw on the faith and lives of Christians to stimulate them to add to the monetary support already being provided through drives by various religious groups.

Simon also said his organization played a key role in drafting a "Right to Food" Resolution that was recently approved in Congress. The resolution affirms the right of all people to adequate diet.

The religious leader emphasized that church groups must continue to get involved in politics to lead such causes as the "Right to Food."

"The church staying out of politics would be like turning much of life over to the devil," he said.

The annual conference conducted by the Texas Agricultural Extension Service and the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station attracted over 250 church ministers and leaders from throughout the state.
