Crosby will revealed

United Press International
REDWOOD CITY, Calif. — Bing Crosby's will preserves the secret of his wealth — estimated at more than $40 million.

The document puts the singer's fortune into a trust for his children and leaves $400,000 in gifts to his wife, relatives, friends and the Jesuit schools in Spokane, Wash., where he was educated.

The nine-page will, dated June 6, was filed Monday in San Mateo Superior Court, near the Crosby home in Hillsborough, south of San Francisco.

Crosby, who disliked discussing his money when he was alive, left a will that does not reveal his worth. He was regarded as one of the wealthiest men in show business and one news magazine recently estimated his fortune at $40-$70 million.

In an interview a few months before his death, the singer said he was worth less than was thought and was not as rich as his close friend, comedian Bob Hope.

The bulk of the estate was left to the "Harry L. Crosby Trust," using his formal name. Full control over the trust was given to his longtime friend and attorney, Richard C. Bergen of Los Angeles, who also was named executor of the will.

A spokesman for the Crosby family said in Los Angeles that he provides for all of Crosby's children — Gary, Philip, Dennis, Lindsay — and his three children, his widow, Kathryn Grant Crosby — Harry, 19, Nathaniel, 17, and Mary Frances, 17.

The value of the trust estate may be made public, the spokesman said. Mrs. Crosby, 43, was worth $150,000, the largest single bequest, and all his personal possessions, including automobiles, silver, jewelry, books, paintings, works of art, furniture, clothing, personal effects and any income policies.

He left $50,000 apiece to the High School and University schools he attended in his hometown of Spokane, along $5,000 to St. Aloysius Catholic Church there, and bequeathed $25,000 to $5,000 to friends and relatives.
