Traveling musical fun, innovative

By ELLIE LAPORTE
The Broadway musical "The Robber Bridegroom," is a folksy fairy tale, complete with a dashing hero, fair maiden, even a wicked step-mother, all set to a Broadway version of country music. Tuesday's Town Hall special attraction performance was held in Rudder Theatre.

The musical, based on a 1942 novella by Eudora Welty, tells the story of a bandit-of-the-woods and his encounters and entanglements with the inhabitants of Rodney, Miss., a small town on the Natchez Trace.

The bandit, Jamie Lockhart, saves the life of a wealthy planter, falls in love with a girl he meets in the forest (who unknown to him, is the planter's lovely daughter, Rosamund), and escapes from the advances of Rosamund's jealous stepmother, Salome.

Mistaken identities create problems for Jamie and Rosamund, as well as a humorous plot involving the evil antics of Salome, as she tries and fails to do away with her stepdaughter. Little Harp, another robber and Jamie's adversary, also produces comedic results with his evil but inept attempts to rob and steal.

Frank Luz and Barbara Marineau were excellent as Lockhart and Rosamund, they gave life and vitality to the characters and made them seem almost believable. Laurie Franks was equally talented in her portrayal of the sinister Salome, as was John Goodman as the comical Little Harp.

The musical numbers, for the most part, were well staged and executed. All of the songs had a country sound with rural, folksy lyrics, and were played by a blue grass band.

Especially effective and enjoyable was the innovative acting of several of the cast members who served as props, from trees to ravens, also providing sound effects such as creaking doors and forest noises.

Overall, it was a entertaining show. There was constant action on stage, with the entire cast involved in one way or another, throughout the performance. The dialogue was irreverent, rowdy, at times bawdy but always amusing.
