Dear Mom and Dad,
"I've thought it over carefully and I've decided life is just too much of a hassle."
"Please don't blame yourself; you've tried really hard and I know you love me and I love you. I just want all of the feelings to stop."
"P. S. I fed Buffy and changed her litter box. Please take good care of her for me."
That suicide note from a girl, like in a report by psychiatrists at the University of Louisville School of Medicine in Kentucky.
The report is not in a medical journal. Rather, it is in Today's Education, journal of the National Education Association.

DR. JOHN J. Schwab and his associates aim their words on suicide at teachers for a sad reason:
"Depression and suicide among American youth have become massive health and social problems that are reaching epidemic proportions."
"Suicide is the third most common cause of death (after accidents and homicides) in young people between the ages of 15 and 24. Each year more than 4,000 persons in that age group kill themselves."
The actual number is higher. Due to social and family pressures, many suicides go down as accidental deaths.

AUTHORITIES estimate that the annual rate of suicide among teen-agers 15 to 19 has more than tripled since 1954.
Educators working with teenagers often are among the first to spot the symptoms of depression and other indicators of possible suicide.
"Teachers should trust their own feelings in assessing a potential suicidal young person," the psychiatrists said.
"Often gut reactions are the most sensitive yardstick. Teachers may have an uneasy feeling that a child might hurt himself or herself."
Teachers can discuss these feelings with the young person and actively assist the student in finding help.

The first sign might be marked behavior changes. Some examples:
— An outgoing child or an obnoxious child suddenly becomes quiet, sullen and withdrawn.
— A hostile child suddenly becomes overly-solicitous and ingratiating toward the teacher and peers.
— A quiet child becomes very active and restless or perhaps comes the clown. Clownish behavior may be a mask for underlying depression and helplessness.

— A child gradually becomes preoccupied with ideas and thoughts of death. He or she may say "Oh, I don't care. I won't be around anyway to find out what happens." Or, "I would like to sleep forever and never get up." Or "Who cares for a tomorrow? There won't be a tomorrow." Or, "Sometimes I would just like to take a gun and blow off my head ... but I'm only joking."
The psychiatrists asked teachers to remember that suicidal youths frequently are grieving over a loss of human contact, loss of love, loss of face or loss of ideals.

"MATERIAL things cannot compensate for this feeling of loss," they said. "Only a relationship with another human being can remedy the feeling to some extent."
The psychiatrists said parents often deny the problem or sweep the storm warnings under the rug.
In keeping a suicide watch in the schools, teachers were urged to remember:

— It's simply not true that those who threaten to commit suicide won't. The majority of those who commit suicide do so on the first attempt and may have talked about it.
— Fewer adolescent boys than girls attempt suicide. But boys are more likely to succeed in killing themselves on first try.

— More suicides occur in late spring and early summer.
— Teen-agers most frequently commit suicide between 3 p.m. and midnight. Most, at home.
