Two alumni take top engineering awards

Former Texas A&M University students took two of the top four prizes with innovative engineering designs in this year's James F. Lincoln Arc Welding Foundation competition.

Neil Jones of Athens received a $500 prize for a "Playground Raceway" which described a two-car, concentric track raceway designed for children's use at a public playground. Ronnie Skerik of Abbott won $250 for the analysis and design of a toothpaste dispenser used by quadriplegics. The students prepared their entries while undergraduate students. The Lincoln Arc Welding Foundation of Cleveland, Ohio, sponsors the Student Engineering Design Competition annually, granting awards in four areas of competition — graduate and undergraduate in two divisions, structural and mechanical. In the 1977 competition, the Foundation granted $23,800 in awards to 67 students of engineering and technology and their 26 respective colleges.

Airforce General to review at march-in

Air Force Maj. Gen. Roy M. Marshall will review Texas A&M's Corps of Cadets at the Arkansas game march-in.

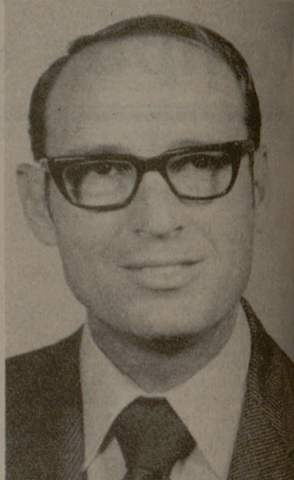

A civilian-soldier, Marshall commands the 10th Air Force (Reserve) headquartered at Bergstrom AFB, at Austin. His home is in Birmingham, Mich. Besides taking salutes at the 12:20 p.m. Corps entry to Kyle Field, Marshall will take part in other campus events including a Saturday morning Corps briefing. The two-star general will be hosted by the Air Force ROTC detachment, headed by Col. Kenneth W. Durham. Marshall flew 79 combat missions in Europe with the 50th Fighter Group during World War II and has 35 years active and reserve service. He had 300 combat hours in the P-47 Thunderbolt. The officer, who grew up in Detroit, maintained Air Force Reserve affiliation after the war with Japan ended, while completing college degree work at Wayne State University and a year of law school. Marshall is president of a Detroit corporation. Until assuming command of the Central Air Force Reserve Region, later redesignated the 10th Air Force (Reserve), Marshall served in various capacities with reserve units based at Selfridge AFB, Mich. He progressed from line pilot to group commander, flying and instructing the P-51, T-33 and F-80, F-86, C-119 and C-130, among other aircraft. Marshall received his first star in April, 1973.

Halliburton Education gives 13th annual grant

A grant of $15,000 was made by Texas A&M to continue the Halliburton Chair held by Dr. Charles A. Rodenberger, assistant dean of engineering and professor of aerospace engineering. This marked the 13th annual grant to the University's College of Engineering by the Halliburton Education Foundation of Dallas. A&M President James E. Miller and Dean of Engineering Fred J. Benson received the grant.
