Pre-law work program

Students get taste of law

By DONNA SCHLABACH
The Pre-Law Society Work Program allows students to gain practical legal experience by working with the Texas A&M University student legal advisor for a semester.

Chris Kling, student legal advisor, recently said only four students were allowed to participate in the program when it was set up last spring. This semester the program has been expanded to include the officers of the Pre-Law Society.

"The only criterion we have is that students be of junior or senior classification and that they have a genuine intent to go to law school," Kling said.

Students are chosen for the work program by the officers of the Pre-Law Society. Jill Hall, secretary of the organization, said society members must fill out applications before they can be considered for the program. She said students are chosen on the basis of why they want to become involved in the program.

"We decide who will be chosen mainly by the desire the student expresses for wanting to be in the program and by what he wants to get out of the experience," she said.

She added that grades are also considered when selecting the students.

Those participating in the program this fall are Alice Morse, Bobby Duncan, Marcia Faykus and Michael Nelson.

Pre-Law Society officers working with the legal advisor this semester are Vicki Brown, president, Roger Haseman, vice-president, Jill Hall, secretary, and Mark Hambleton, treasurer.

Kling said the students sit in on interview sessions and ask questions about anything they don't understand.

"We took them to the university library to acquaint them with the law books," Kling said.

He said this is the greatest benefit for the students because they will be expected to know how to use the law books for research when they go to law school.

Hall said she thought the greatest benefit was in getting a chance to see what a lawyer really does.

"Most people don't know it, but law is a lot of research," she said.

Kling said each student has been assigned a legal question which he must find the answer. He said the answers must be backed up by research from the law books.

"These are not hypothetical questions, either," he said. "They are questions we need answers to, but don't have the time to go to the library and research for."

Kling said he plans to take the students to the courthouse in Bryan and to another city to visit with the legal staff of a large law firm.

Hey, watch it!

Students aren't the only ones who realize that learning can be a painful experience. All but this bewildered Siamese cat seem happy with the results as Dr. W.F. Juliff (center) instructs these third year Vet-Med students on properly administering an injection.

No smoking

United Press International
WASHINGTON — The federal government will begin a public campaign in January to convince Americans not to smoke. But it won't end its payments to support tobacco prices.

"It's clear to me there's nothing I can do to eliminate the tobacco subsidy ... so I'm not going to tilt at that windmill," said HEW Secretary Joseph Califano Jr. Wednesday.
