

Mine eats garbage!

The Engineering and Design Graphics Department's Visiting Engineer Program will evaluate Texas A&M students' engineering design projects Thursday and Friday.

Semester projects by student teams will be presented for the visiting engineers' evaluation and critique.

The program brought nine engineers from Houston and Waco firms in October for preliminary guidance, idea generation and parallel examples from company operations. Department Head Dr. James Earle said that student teams have completed work on projects including a garbage compactor, gate opener, overhead projector adapter and a pole vault pit.

One of the course requirements is team presentation of a design solution before the visiting engineers. The presentation calls for oral, graphic and written engineering communications, which the students will use during the remainder of their undergraduate studies and later in their jobs.

The Visiting Engineer Program provides a broad view of the engineer's approach to problem solving and design methods, Earle said.
