Experiment station assistants chosen
Texas Agricultural Experiment Station Director Neville P. Clarke last week announced the appointment of Everett D. Laird and John E. Howard as assistants to the director.
Dr. Clarke said "both men add needed expertise in fields of communication, management and resource analysis."
Laird will provide leadership in resource analysis, involving special projects for Clarke and his assistants. Laird succeeds Glenn Dowling, now on the staff of President Jarvis Miller.
Howard, who has a joint appointment with the Department of Agricultural Communications, will work closely with researchers, communicators and the TAES director in finding new and effective ways to communicate research programs and results to producers and consumers. His media liaison work will involve analysis of communication techniques.
Laird has a background with industry and has been in the fields of resource analysis, logistics, management, personnel administration, data processing and computer products to enhance management. He formerly served as business manager for the Brazos Valley Region Mental Health and Mental Retardation Center.
Howard's 10 years experience in the communication field includes three years a press secretary to Cong. Olin E. Teague and press officer to the Science and Technology Committee. He also served as producer-director at KAMU-TV, College Station, from 1971 to 1972 and as account executive at KBTX-TV in 1970 and 1971.

Entomologist wins achievement award
Dr. Horace Van Cleave, entomologist with the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station, is this year's winner of the Entomological Society of America Distinguished Achievement Award for Teaching.
The honor came during the society's national meeting which ended Dec. 1 in Washington, D.C.
Van Cleave is the organization's fourth recipient of the award. The honor is presented each year to the member recognized as the "outstanding entomology teacher in the United States, Canada and Mexico."
Dr. Perry Adkisson, head of the Texas A&M University Entomology Department, said Van Cleave also is recognized as a master teacher at A&M and a recipient of the Distinguished Achievement Award for Teaching provided by the A&M Association of Former Students in 1969.
The entomology professor's other achievements include being named the A&M College of Agriculture Honor Professor and receiving the Distinguished Faculty-Student Relations Award of the Civilian Student Council.
Earlier this year, Van Cleave was presented the Distinguished Achievement Award for Teaching by the Southwestern Branch of the Entomological Society of America.
