She often renews acquaintances with former customers. They bring ated the Chicken Ranch when it was wives or girlfriends to see the house and to introduce them to the slender polite woman who ran it.

"Wives aren't as foolish as you might think," Miss Edna said. "They're broad-minded and they're not stupid enough to think their husbands never visited a place like the Chicken Ranch.'

Edna Milton dressed in a pale green pantsuit that matches her eyes, looks like a young grandmother now. She was born in Oklahoma during the Dust Bowl and is a self-professed graduate of the "University of the World.

But she learned to be a good businesswoman and ran her brothel on strict rules.

A madam is nothing more than a landlady," she said.

The Chicken Ranch employed nine to 12 prostitues and all followed the house rules. Miss Edna didn't allow liquor on the premises. Her girls were not allowed to take pills or other drugs. Meals were served at regular hours.
