Pierce new head of vet pathology

Dr. Kenneth R. Pierce has been named head of the veterinary pathology department at Texas A&M University, announced Dean George C. Shelton of Veterinary Medicine.

Pierce replaces Dr. Charles H. Bridges, who is returning to research and teaching after 17 years as department head.

Pierce, formerly a practitioner at San Angelo, holds the rank of professor and is a diplomate of the American College of Veterinary Pathologists. He received the D.V.M., M.S. and Ph.D. degrees from Texas A&M, where he was first appointed an instructor of veterinary anatomy in 1957.

Pierce has received the Texas A&M Distinguished Faculty Award for Teaching and the Norden Award for Teaching. He has been listed in "Who's Who in the South and Southwest," "Who's Who in American Education," "Outstanding Educators in America," and "American Men and Women of Science."

He has more than 50 published publications and a like number of paper presentations. Pierce lists professional membership in AVMA, Texas VMA, Phi Kappa Phi, Sigma Xi, Gamma Sigma Delta and Phi Zeta.

Real estate post is filled by Levi

Donald R. Levi has been named to the new position of associate director of the Texas Real Estate Research Center (TRERC) at Texas A&M University.

Levi has been on the Texas A&M faculty since 1973, working both as a professor in the department of agricultural economics and as a TRERC research economist specializing in real estate legal and legislative affairs.

A native of Missouri, Levi received his bachelor of science and juris doctor degrees from the University of Missouri. He has a Ph.D. in agricultural economics from Washington State University.

Egypt, Israel negotiating again

United Press International
CAIRO — Egypt and Israel Tuesday opened a second round of military negotiations on the issue of Israeli withdrawal from the Sinai Desert. But President Anwar Sadat threatened their chance of success by rejecting the presence of Jewish settlements on Egyptian soil.

Israeli Defense Minister Ezer Weizman described the negotiations with War Minister Gen. Mohammed Gamassy as "another link in what unfortunately is a difficult road."

Their first round of talks had been broken off Jan. 13 after reaching a deadlock on the future of 19 settlements Israel built in northeastern Sinai and along its southern tip.

But even before the new round of military negotiations got under way, Sadat rejected the continued presence of Israeli settlements in the Sinai. He said Palestinian self-determination was the most difficult problem in peace negotiations with Israel and appealed for U.S. help.

"We do not agree to the settlements issue," Sadat said. "The whole world does not agree and President Carter does not agree."

Sadat said he instructed Gamassy to meet Israel's security needs provided they are "not at the expense of our land and sovereignty."

But Sadat said Egypt and Israel should not differ on the Sinai peninsula, and added, "The real difficulty in the negotiations at the moment is self-determination for the Palestinians."

Sadat spoke to reporters after receiving an American "peace delegation" led by Rabbi Joseph H. Ehrenkranz of Stamford, Conn.

Asked if a compromise on the Palestinian issue was possible, Sadat said, "We must find a way to have it (self-determination)."

"The significance is not in those two words but in what is behind them. We are after permanent peace, once and for all, and without solving the Palestinian question we cannot have peace."

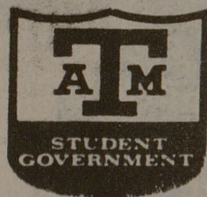

As Sadat spoke, Foreign Minister Mohammed Kamel was meeting with U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Alfred Atherton, who has been attempting to narrow Egyptian-Israeli differences on the Palestinian question and other Middle East peace principles.

Atherton had brought "ideas" from Jerusalem, but he said after the two-hour meeting, "There are many points on which we do not see eye-to-eye."
