PTA to help TV watchers with courses

United Press International

Johnny, that All-American dummy, can't read, write, add, subtract, divide — as you know. To keep this non-sexist, you also know there's an elusive female dummy on the school scene. Her name is Janie. And she can't do those things either.

Every schoolroom in America is supposed to have students following the non-performance curves of poor Johnny and pitiable Janie.

The lists of things Johnny and Janie can't do is growing. The latest addition: Watching television in an intelligent manner. Johnny can't do it. And neither can Janie.

But the two dumb ones need to feel so disgraced over this latest shortcoming. The PTA says students are deficient when it comes to being able to watch television in an intelligent manner.

The reason: There is no course in viewing skills — a problem the National PTA proposes to remedy over the next several years.

Grace Baisinger, president of the National PTA, told all about it the other day in New York. She talked to the International Radio and Television Society, a group composed of broadcast executives.

Baisinger, from Washington, D.C., said the PTA's new television project is to prepare comprehensive curriculum materials — four different curriculums — on intelligent viewing.

There will be one for kindergarten through grade 2, another for grades 3 through 5, another for grades 6 through 8, and a fourth, for high-schoolers.

In an interview Baisinger said the television course materials will be about three years to develop. Cooperation will be sought from the television industry.

Funds for the multi-million dollar project will be sought from many sources. To maintain independence, however, no more than $30,000 will be accepted from any source.

CBS already has donated $30,000 and Baisinger said Gene Jankowski, president of the CBS Broadcast Group, will help raise funds.

"We will invite the television industry to join with the staff in the initial formulation of the curriculum content and outline," Baisinger said.

"During the project development, we will ask the industry representatives to serve on the advisory board which will give continual reaction to the project staff."

The curriculum material will be fashioned to educate youth about the operation of the television industry and the problems and challenges faced by the industry.

Technical film methods will be reviewed with particular emphasis on the use of the camera to create image, convey an emotion, and imply a value.

Materials will include lesson plans, discussion questions, instructions for script development, videotapes of actual programs and interviews with members of the television industry.

Commenting on the project, Jankowski said:

"The American people should know more about television, both as an art form and as an industry. They should know the good and the bad and how to tell the difference."

"They should bring to television the same sense of understanding and criticism that they bring to other forms of communications."

The PTA's concern about television and youth led in 1976 and 1977 to the sponsorship of eight regional hearings on television violence.

Witnesses came from the ranks of the law, medicine, religion, psychiatry, education and include parents and students.

In city after city, speakers cited the reality of television in the lives of children, and the need for parents and teachers to accept that reality.

Speakers also called for a comprehensive curriculum in viewing skills. The call came from broadcasters as well as professional educators and parents.

"We were told over and over that educators and parents and students need to learn to deal with television constructively because it is a medium that is here today," Baisinger said.

"We were told to equip the children with the ability to read television on the intellectual and the subliminal level."

The curriculum the PTA has on the drawing board will do just that — it is hoped.

X-rays may pose risk

MADISON, Wis. — Patient X-rays taken by many dentists, doctors and chiropractors needlessly risk doses of radiation that could cause cancer, a medical professor says.

"I don't want to scare people away from getting X-rays," said John B. Cameron, a University of Wisconsin-Madison medical physicist.

"I think they should be aware, however, of the risks X-rays pose, and what they can do as individuals to reduce the risks."

Cameron heads one of six federally funded units monitoring the use of X-rays. He said recent studies show overexposure may cause leukemia, breast cancer and thyroid cancer.
