Kent killings noted

United Press International
KENT, Ohio — A small group of students and faculty members gathered Thursday on the Kent State University Commons in unseasonably cool and windy weather to begin ceremonies marking the eighth anniversary of the killing of four students by National Guard troops.

About 220 students and 75 faculty members attended the beginning of the commemoration for the four students and nine others who were wounded when National Guard troops opened fire on a group of anti-war demonstrators on May 4, 1970.

Many factors alter consumption

Aggies not top beer drinkers

By JAN BAILEY

Coors, Lone Star, Schlitz, Budweiser, Miller, Michelob, Pearl, Old Milwaukee, Shiner, Andecker, Falstaff, Pabst, Olympia, etc., etc., by the can, cup and keg hundreds of gallons of beer are sold in Brazos County every week. But contrary to an old Aggie myth, Brazos County is not the beer drinking capital of Texas.

Beer distributors in Bryan and College Station say they do a good business. Many attribute much of their success to beer-drinking Aggies. But Bill Lawrence, assistant supervisor in Brazos County for the Texas Alcoholic Beverage Commission, said there are several counties in Texas with more per capita guzzling than Brazos.

According to the Wholesale Beer Distributors of Texas report for 1976-77, more than 24 million 12-ounce cans of beer were sold in Bryan-College Station in 1977. But almost three times that many were sold in Longview in Gregg County. What determines the amount of beer consumed? In Brazos County, it's up to the seasons. The mainstays of local beer distributors are hot weather and football weekends.

Dianne Hayes of the local Coors franchise said most of their business is based on Texas A&M University. Business is best in the fall when students return to school and in the Morello said the records help explain fluctuations in sales. He explained that a recent three-day rainy spell cut monthly sales by 5 percent.

All the distributors said the first week of each month is the best for sales. January and February are the worst months.

The beer business is a very competitive game. Distributors keep constant tabs on their competitor's sales. The compare customers and ads. And they're not above knocking the competitor's product. They all believe they sell the best beer on the market.

Schaffhauser said the American consumer is generally very uninformed about the beer industry.

"They do what the boob tube tells them," he said.

Morello keeps a picture album that illustrates this competitive theme. The photographs show how beer signs are used to market the product and bump the competition.

"We're hoping to get this business down even more to a science," Daily and monthly sales reports, annual totals, even daily weather reports are logged and filed for reference.

spring before graduation. Several distributors echoed this tie to the University's schedule.

"When the Aggies are out of town, it's pretty slow," said Carl Schaffhauser, owner of Schaffhauser Distributing Co. in College Station.

Les Morello of the G. F. Sousares Distributing Co. in Bryan was one of the few distributors who said his business was not heavily influenced by students. Schlitz and Old Milwaukee, two Sousares brands, constitute about one-half of all beer sales in Brazos County.

Morello said the biggest Schlitz and Old Milwaukee customer is the blue collar worker. Like all the distributors, Morello said he is aware of what his customer buys, where he buys and when he buys.

"We're hoping to get this business down even more to a science," Morello said. The Sousares company already keeps extensive records on its sales. Daily and monthly sales reports, annual totals, even daily weather reports are logged and filed for reference.

Distributors try to overpower their competitors' signs with their own by hanging larger, more colorful ones in strategic places in bars and stores. They even try persuading the owners to completely remove the competitive sign.

The competition doesn't stop at signs. Every distributor likes free advertising, so a myriad of beer-backed products are on sale at each warehouse. Baseball caps, can openers, trash cans, t-shirts, halter

Chemical harmful to pot smoker labeled safe for use on sugar cane

United Press International
WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. — The poisonous chemical paraquat, which can cause lung damage to smokers of Mexican marijuana, is widely used in U.S. farming, including the harvesting of sugar cane, it was reported Thursday.

Agriculture officials were quick to emphasize the use of paraquat presents no dangers for consumers of sugar produced in Florida or Texas.

"I haven't heard of anyone smoking sugar cane leaves," George Wedgeworth, president of the Florida Sugar Cane League, said.

Wedgeworth said crop dusting planes have been spraying paraquat crops as a harvest aid for about 10 years. He said its use has been limited, estimating that less than 1 percent of Florida's 300,000 acres of sugar cane are treated with paraquat each year.

The defoliant withers growth and, in the case of sugarcane, aids the burning of the cane just prior to the harvesting of cane stalks.

"The Environmental Protection Agency licensed paraquat as a non-hazardous chemical for use on certain crops at least five years ago only after extensive testing," Wedgeworth said.

Dr. Joseph Orsenigo, research director for the Florida Sugar Cane League, said no traces of paraquat ever have been found in tests of sugar from fields sprayed with the herbicide.

HEW has issued warnings about the dangers of smoking paraquat-treated marijuana.

But the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta reported it has documented any cases of lung cancer related to paraquat.
