

New A&M administrators

Greathouse, Groot appointed

Dr. T.R. Greathouse and Pieter Groot were promoted to new administrative positions at Texas A&M University at the system's Board of Regents meeting Friday.

Greathouse was appointed associate vice president for agriculture and renewable resources, effective immediately and Groot was named assistant vice president for academic budgets, effective Sept. 1.

Greathouse joined the Texas A&M faculty last year as associate dean of agriculture and professor of animal science. The former head of the Animal Sciences Department at Colorado State University is an internationally recognized livestock judge.

Groot, a native of Haarlem, the Netherlands, studied business administration and seven foreign languages. He served in the Royal Dutch army and the Royal Dutch air force, receiving advanced flight training in the United States. Groot joined the Texas A&M staff in 1956, after discharge from service to his native country, and was responsible for research and ship administration. He became a naturalized citizen of the United States in 1961.

TAMU and extension services receive more than 83 percent of new budget

Texas A&M University and its associated agricultural and engineering extension services netted more than 83 percent of the $322,785,718 Texas A&M University System budget for 1978-79.

The Board of Regents approved the record operating budget last Friday.

The university system budget increased 8.34 percent over last year with all 10 units of the statewide system posting gains for the fiscal year beginning Sept. 1.

Texas A&M University and its research and public service units received a combined total of $270,668,039. University President Jarvis Miller said this marks the first full year in which the agricultural and engineering extension services and their associated organizations will be administratively attached to the University in the allocation of budget funds.

Texas A&M's operating budget increased 7.9 percent over last year for a total of $181,398,181. Funds for the system research and public service units were allocated as follows:

- Texas Agricultural Extension Service — $31,231,252
- Texas Engineering Experiment Station — $17,101,259
- Texas Engineering Extension Service — $7,473,049
- Rodent and Predatory Animal Control — $1,330,280

Other Texas A&M appropriations include a 3.9 percent salary increase for faculty and a 5 percent increase in salaries for employees earning $12,000 or less a year.

Funds for organized research received an expected 50 percent cut for 1978-79.

The new budget also includes $25,000 for initial planning for construction of a new dormitory to house 500 women (see related story, page 1), another $155,000 for preliminary design of the primary facility for the new College of Medicine and $37,800 for the second phase master plan of improvements at Easterwood Airport.
