Proposition 13 originator blasts Carter's statement

United Press International
WASHINGTON — Howard Jarvis, originator of California's successful property tax-slashing initiative, said Monday the claim that the controversial move will hurt minorities is "a stupid statement to make."
Jarvis, the 76-year-old antitax crusader, told a Capitol Hill news conference President Carter does not understand the effects of California's Proposition 13.
"I'd like to meet him (Carter) because I don't think he understands what happened in California. I think I could help him a little bit."
There were no plans for Jarvis to go to the White House, although he planned to spend the day at the Capitol.
Speaking of Carter, Jarvis said, "I think he's sort of like George McGovern, who made a statement (at the Americans for Democratic Action convention this weekend) he must have got out of the funny papers — who said something about it being a racial thing. They're doing that out of desperation. It's a stupid statement to make and it takes a first-rate education to understand."

He said his proposal will help low-income minorities because it will reduce rents.
Jarvis, surrounded by Republican Sens. S.I. Hayakawa of California, Robert Dole of Kansas, William Roth of Delaware, Clifford Hansen of Wyoming and Richard Schweiker of Pennsylvania, said he would also meet with Democrats, including Senate leaders Robert Byrd and Alan Cranston.
"I hope to educate the capital about what happened in California," he said, calling the tax reduction wave "a new kind of Americanism."

Jarvis told reporters he did not have specific areas in mind for cutting the federal budget, but "the way to do it is not give the government so much money... If they don't have the money they can't spend it."
Although the amendment to California state constitution cost $7 billion the amount local communities have annually to fund schools, fire and police departments and other services, Jarvis refused to suggest where cuts should be made.
"Ample money" is available, local governments set priorities, Jarvis said in a statement to reporters on Sunday.
"If properly spent and priorities are right, I don't think we're going to have to call on a federal government," Jarvis said.

Nation's mayors want government to help finance local programs

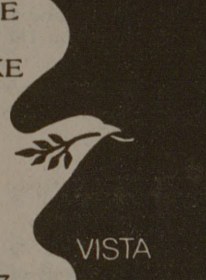

United Press International
ATLANTA — Dozens of the nation's mayors, faced with a spreading federal government for their problems and want the Carter administration to assume a bigger share of local health, education and welfare programs.
Meeting to grapple with the effects of the passage of Proposition 13 in California, the municipal leaders said the federal government has a responsibility to help cities shoulder the burden of the taxpayer-ordered property tax rollback.
"As inflation hits, the federal government's revenue increases because of the tax structure," said Syracuse Mayor Lee Alexander, president of the U.S. Conference of Mayors meeting over the weekend in Atlanta. "That is one more reason for the government to pick up the tab of some of these programs it forces on the cities."
Of the more than 40 mayors who met to discuss the implications of the California vote, most said they feared it would lead to a disruption in services, massive layoffs and an inability to sustain growth. Through a massive infusion of federal dollars could the cities meet the challenge, they said.

John Gunther, executive director of the mayor's conference, said a formal request would be forwarded to President Carter asking that he direct the federal government to fund formulas he is revising in Proposition 13.
Oakland Mayor Lionel Wilson said what started as a tax revolt turned into an attack on government. "Reason went over the top and emotions took over," he said.

Teen-age girls have fewer pregnancies
United Press International
WASHINGTON — A national survey shows contraceptives used by about 680,000 pregnant women among unwed teen-age girls during a one-year period.
The study, conducted by the Hopkins University and Johns Hopkins University, also found that the number of such pregnancies would be 1,460,000 each year if the 780,000 which actually occur, the authors said.
In a publication associated with the Planned Parenthood Federation of America, the authors said the way to prevent teen-age pregnancies is to make contraceptives available through clinics, doctors and drugstores.
The sociologists also called for "better information about pregnancy risk — in a form that young people can absorb and will believe."
