Matamoros feels effects after rioting

United Press International
MATAMOROS, Mexico — Several burned out buildings and dozens of soldiers guarding city hall and the mayor's house were the only signs Wednesday of the rioting that has struck this normally peaceful border city for two nights, leaving three rioters dead and scores injured.

Soldiers were stationed at the city's main square where most of the rioting took place Monday night after a demonstration against police brutality turned violent and at the home of Mayor Antonio Cavazos, about three blocks from the International Bridge linking Matamoros to Brownsville.

Hundreds of protesting youths taunted soldiers with rocks and bricks Tuesday night before clearing the streets about midnight. One band of students went to the red-light district and wrecked a nightclub chief said was owned by Police Chief Emiliano del Toro.

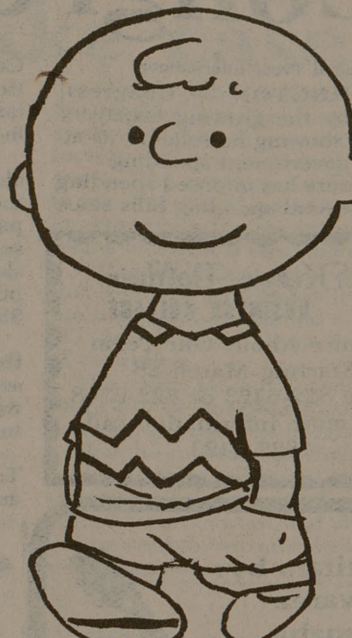

The students apparently were not satisfied with the suspension of del Toro and 11 other officers Tuesday and the firing of three others.

The firings and suspensions involved the alleged beating death of 14-year-old Salvador Vargas Barba, last week.

Barba died in a jail cell and the students claim he was beaten by police who demanded 400 pesos from the youth's family before allowing him to be taken to a hospital.

Government officials said soldiers would stay in the area until they were sure the situation had calmed.
