Artists display wares

Arts and Crafts Fair continues today

If a person cares to get nailed, potted, or drawn and Aggie quartered, the Arts and Crafts fair being held through today by the Rudder Fountain is the place to go. Artists, whether students, taculty, staff, or spouses of the foregoing, displayed wares varying from fake-fur worms and other novelties, to pottery and stained glass, to drawings, prints and nail sculpture. Many of the artists were at their first Aggie craft fair. They had various reasons for selling their art.

low-priced (50 cents) so children could buy them.

Marla Hendricks, a graduate student in Bioengineering, displayed her macrame and pottery along with her husband's hand-crafted jewelry. She said she was "just getting it out of the house."

Other artists sold jewelry and pottery, but one of the most unique crafts was Click East's nail art. He bends horseshoe nails and binds them with fine copper wire to make jewelry.

He said he first saw art being made from nails during his travels to Rome.

Though most artists said they enjoyed just being out in the fair, some made a comment like Geneva Baker's, a vet student's wife. "Campus art shows are good, but people aren't willing to pay the prices that they are worth."

Gladys Stone, 62, from the University's food services department, displayed various novelty crafts, including fake-fur worms and an Aggie quarter. The quarter consisted of a washer with three pennies and a .22 caliber shell attached to it. She said she simply enjoyed mixing with the young people and kept her worms

'Pajama Tops' performance is dinner theater at its best

Pity those who won't be able to acquire tickets to "Pajama Tops." They will be missing dinner theater at its best.

The Aggie Players are presenting the three-act farce in conjunction with the Summer Programming Committee and have done a great job.

The play, which is a bedroom farce based on the original French play MouMou by Jean de Letraz, revolves around the attempts of a French businessman, Georges Chauvinet, to conceal his mistress from his wife. Under the impression that his mistress is one of her husband's associates, Yvonne Chauvinet sends an invitation to the mistress, who is unaware her lover is married.

Meanwhile a childhood chum of Georges, a gay poet, shows up, needing to spend the night.

ningly acted by Christine Warren, who wants to become a big-time hooker.

Debbie Ellis, as the mistress and Sheree Kemp, as the wife, play their parts well. Ellis looks appropriately mistress-like, and Kemp fits her role as an amorous wife. James Hall, playing the retiring old inspector whose cry upon being teased was, "if only I were 20 years younger," is truly good. His old man is a true old man.

The weakest link in the play is Charlie Andrews playing the forger, Jacques, who in reality is the husband of the mistress, Babette. Though he is by no means a bad actor, Andrews' French accent sometimes slips out of gear, and his portrayal is a bit mixed. His character needs a tighter presentation.

The set is well conceived and open. All tables have good views of the stage, separate from it, yet close enough to maintain the play's illusion.

No food was served the opening night, but the play is good enough to keep you laughing even if you are served only an overcooked hamburger with soggy french fries.

Review

Georges drafts him to pose as the husband of his mistress to allay his wife's suspicions.

And things get more complicated from there.

But masterful acting keeps everything from becoming too confused.

Bruce Monroe as the poet, Leonard, and David Campbell, as Georges Chauvinet, should receive kudos for their acting.

Georges is the perfect businessman, with his precise mustache, erect posture, and frenetic machine-like gesturing when exasperated.

Monroe, though, handles a much more difficult character. A businessman's character is more clear cut than that of a homosexual. Instead of doing the obvious and miming around, Monroe uses a balanced approach that is mildly effeminate without being offensive. This makes him seem even more comic when, at the end of the play, he finally sleeps with a woman.

The only clue he has to her identity is that she is wearing only a pajama top, hence the name of the play.

It turns out he has slept with the Chauvinet's maid, Claudine, win-

StageCenter show to benefit KAMU-FM

KAMU, Texas A&M University's educational and public broadcasting network, has several special events in store for viewers and listeners during August.

StageCenter, the Bryan-College Station community theater group, will present a benefit performance of Moliere's "The Way of All Scoundrels" Monday night at the theater, located at Villa Maria Road and South College Avenue in Bryan. Curtain for the special performance will be at 8 p.m., with tickets in the form of a $3 tax deductible donation to KAMU-FM.

Aug. 15, friends of the station will gather at the KAMU studios on campus for an organizational meeting. The purpose of the meeting is to organize a "friends group" that will aid the station on a variety of levels, ranging from volunteer services to fund-raising projects, Jean Herbert-Weisenburg, development and promotion coordinator for the station, said.

"To date, nearly $5,000 has been raised, and, if we continue at this rate, our goal of $29,500 by Aug. 31, 1979 can be reached," Wiesenburg said.

Also scheduled is a KAMU-FM benefit at 7:30 p.m. Aug. 25 in Rudder Theater. The benefit will feature a special large screen color presentation of Leonard Bernstein's gala 60th birthday party. Admission is free, but a $2.50 tax deductible contribution to KAMU-FM is requested. Reservations are required and may be made by calling 845-1526.

The Bryan-College Station Chamber Orchestra has announced that the first performance of its 1978-79 season will benefit KAMU-FM. Time and location of that performance will be announced at a later date.
