Two dynamite bombs found at Grand Central Station

United Press International
NEW YORK — Two dynamite bombs found at the United Nations and Grand Central Station were placed by Croatian terrorists "well-schooled" in constructing explosives, police said. Neither device exploded.

Two notes found with the bombs Monday claimed they were planted by the Croatian Freedom Fighters, who seek the separation of Croatia from Yugoslavia, police said.

The notes demanded the release of a Croatian accused of trying to kill the Yugoslavian ambassador to West Germany.

Chief of Detectives James Sullivan called the group "very well-schooled bomb makers."

A U.N. spokesman said the bomb found on a window ledge of the Dag Hammarskjold Library was "enough to blow up the library."

The notes denounced "the terrorist ways of Yugoslavia dictatorship and its genocide of Croats" and demanded the release of Steve Bilandzich, a German citizen of Croatian birth.

Bilandzich was arrested in Düsseldorf, Germany, for attempting to kill the Yugoslavian ambassador to that country.

About 3:10 a.m. a routine security patrol found the first of the two bombs.

Sullivan said the bomb consisted of five sticks of dynamite, a blasting cap, battery and wristwatch timer. It did not go off "for some unexplained reason."

A man described as having a "heavily accented" voice called WCBS-TV at 3:30 a.m. to announce the location of the first bomb. Twenty minutes later a second call said another bomb had been placed in a Grand Central locker by the "freedom fighters."

Sullivan said the second bomb was not set to go off. Bomb squad members transported the bombs to the police firing range in the Bronx.

Legionnaires' disease bacterium found in air conditioning unit

United Press International
ATLANTA — Federal disease researchers have tracked the bacterium of Legionnaires' disease to a University of Indiana air conditioning unit and a nearby creek, raising the possibility that the killer germ might be spread through air conditioning.

Officials of the Center for Disease Control also announced Friday that a new strain of Legionnaires' disease had been found in two patients.

A CDC spokesman said the "serogroup" did not show up through regular testing, but "looked and acted just like Legionnaires' disease."

Doctors said the Indiana discovery was a major breakthrough in their two-year effort to solve the puzzle that began in Philadelphia where 29 legionnaires were killed by the disease during a convention in the summer of 1976.

In the subsequent outbreak at Bloomington, Ind., 21 campus residents were stricken and three died. Nineteen of the victims had stayed overnight in the building where the contaminated air conditioner cooling tower was found.

Dr. David Fraser, a CDC epidemiologist and head of a special pathogenic unit conducting a two-year investigation of Legionnaires' disease, said a new laboratory procedure allowing the cultivation of Legionnaires' disease bacterium in two days rather than five led to identification of the organism in the water at Bloomington.

Blacks say police restrict walking area

United Press International
TOWSON, Md. — Baltimore County Executive Theodore Venetoulis says he has ordered the county's police chief to investigate charges that police issued black residents passes so they could walk in certain areas at night.

"Activities of this type are appalling and will not be tolerated by our administration," Venetoulis said Monday. "I have instructed the chief of police to take charge of a full-scale investigation and if the charges are true to find out exactly who is responsible."
