Two-a-days are hot

By DAVID BOGGAN

For the past week, the Texas Aggie football team has been participating in that late summer ritual of heat and hitting known as two-a-day workouts.

Temperatures on the Astrofurfed surface of Kyle Field have reached 140 degrees at times, but the team has continued its morning and afternoon drills without any heat-related illnesses.

"The heat has been very intense," head coach Emory Bellard said, "but these guys have absolutely refused to let up in any way, which makes it really encouraging."

"I have been very pleased with all respects of practice. Everyone came back in real good shape. I've been very pleased with our freshmen, also."

Most people associated with two-a-days agreed with Bellard concerning the temperatures.

"It's been rough; it's hot as hell out there," said Johnnie Donalhue, defensive tackle. "I believe our progress on defense is good—just like it ought to be at this point."

Concerning his progress in workouts after missing spring training with a leg injury, the senior defensive lineman said, "It's going to take time for me to get the hang of things again, but everything is going to come around. I'll be ready for the first game."

The offense has been sweating equally as much as the defense.

"It's extremely hot and the humidity is getting to us, too," said sophomore quarterback Mike Mosley. "I think we're looking real good. Of course, we're still in the learning stage. The coaches say that both me and David (Beal) are looking fair at quarterback. We've both got to improve our passing and find our receivers. Our running is fine."

Although he might not get as hot as some of the rest of the players, kicker Tony Franklin is still actively involved in two-a-days.

"We (Franklin and punter David Appleby) do our job and the rest of the team does theirs," the senior kicker said. "I've been kicking better than I ever have in two-a-days. Usually, I start slow and have a bad first game. But I've been kicking far and consistent. I'm not going to have a bad first game or any bad games."

A new NCAA rule will bring the ball back to the line of scrimmage after missed field goal attempts.

Franklin, who holds a school record with a 65-yard field goal, said this rule doesn't alter his practice procedures.

"That aspect of my workouts hasn't changed much," he said. "I've got to stay in practice because you never know when a long field goal might be needed to win a game."

Players are not the only ones who get hot during two-a-days. The managers and trainers work up a considerable sweat, too.

"It's a lot of work," said manager Greg Smith, "but the main thing is it's extra hot. We (the managers and trainers) always come early and stay late. But when we get to a bowl game, it will all be worthwhile."

But with all of the comments and complaints about the heat, there is still one person on the field who would like to be a little hotter and sweat a little more. He wears a whistle around his neck and is working as an assistant coach but he would rather be suited up and working out.

"It's hard to explain, but I miss it," said Eddie Hardin, the senior fullback who's football career was ended by a neck injury. "It feels like I'm not part of the team. I know it's hot out there and everything, but I'd still like to be out there. I'm involved, but not in the way I'd like to be involved."

After injuries sidelined both starting fullback George Woodard and Hardin, the Aggies were faced with the problem of finding a replacement. Hardin believes they have found one.

"Naturally, I've been watching the fullbacks," he said. "David Brothers is going to make a real good fullback. Raymond Belcher is going to be good also. And that freshman, Roger Wiley, is quick. He needs to learn the offense and he'll be good."

A welcomed ice bath is received by Aggie defensive tackle Eugene Sanders during a hot afternoon of two-a-day workouts. Temperatures of up to 140 degrees have been measured on the surface of Kyle Field during the practice sessions. Coach Emory Bellard said the players "have refused to let up in any way," despite the heat. Two-a-days will continue until the end of the week.
