Fighter taking food, not army, to Nicaragua

United Press International
ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — Former Marine Guy Gabaldon says he's now planning to take food and medicine to Nicaragua instead of his 100 man army to fight Communism in the central American nation.

"I'm telling my boys to hold off, but keeping them on alert," Gabaldon said Tuesday. "I've changed plans and will take medicine and food instead of armed forces."

Gabaldon, 52, who is credited with capturing 2,000 Japanese troops in World War II, placed an advertisement in a local newspaper last week announcing he was seeking recruits "to fight Communist takeover in Central America."

But Gabaldon said he changed his plans after making a trip to Costa Rica and talking with refugees from Nicaragua.

"It's a real mess down there," he said. "High school kids and women are bearing arms against (Nicaraguan President Anastasio) Somoza's troops. It would be necessary to fight them and I won't let my men shoot women and children."

Gabaldon said he may reconsider his decision not to take troops to Nicaragua if Fidel Castro leads an invasion of the embattled country.

"I will not fight as a Somoza soldier," Gabaldon said. "But you can't fight Communism now without fighting on his side. Somoza's troops are killing too many women and children."

Gabaldon, who said he quickly signed up 100 persons willing to assist him in his original venture, said it would take "thousands" to fight an invasion led by Castro.

"I will take them all if Castro invades," he said. "If Nicaragua falls, Costa Rica will go too and there goes all of Central America. As it stands, we're doing nothing to fight Communism there."

Gabaldon said when he arrived in Costa Rica his life was threatened by soldiers who accused him of supporting Somoza.

"The anti-Somoza people tried to do me in," he said. "I had no idea the publicity which preceded me had me pegged as a Somoza supporter. I'm not."

Gabaldon said he would spend this week seeking donations of food and medical supplies to take to Nicaragua. He said he would deliver the items himself.

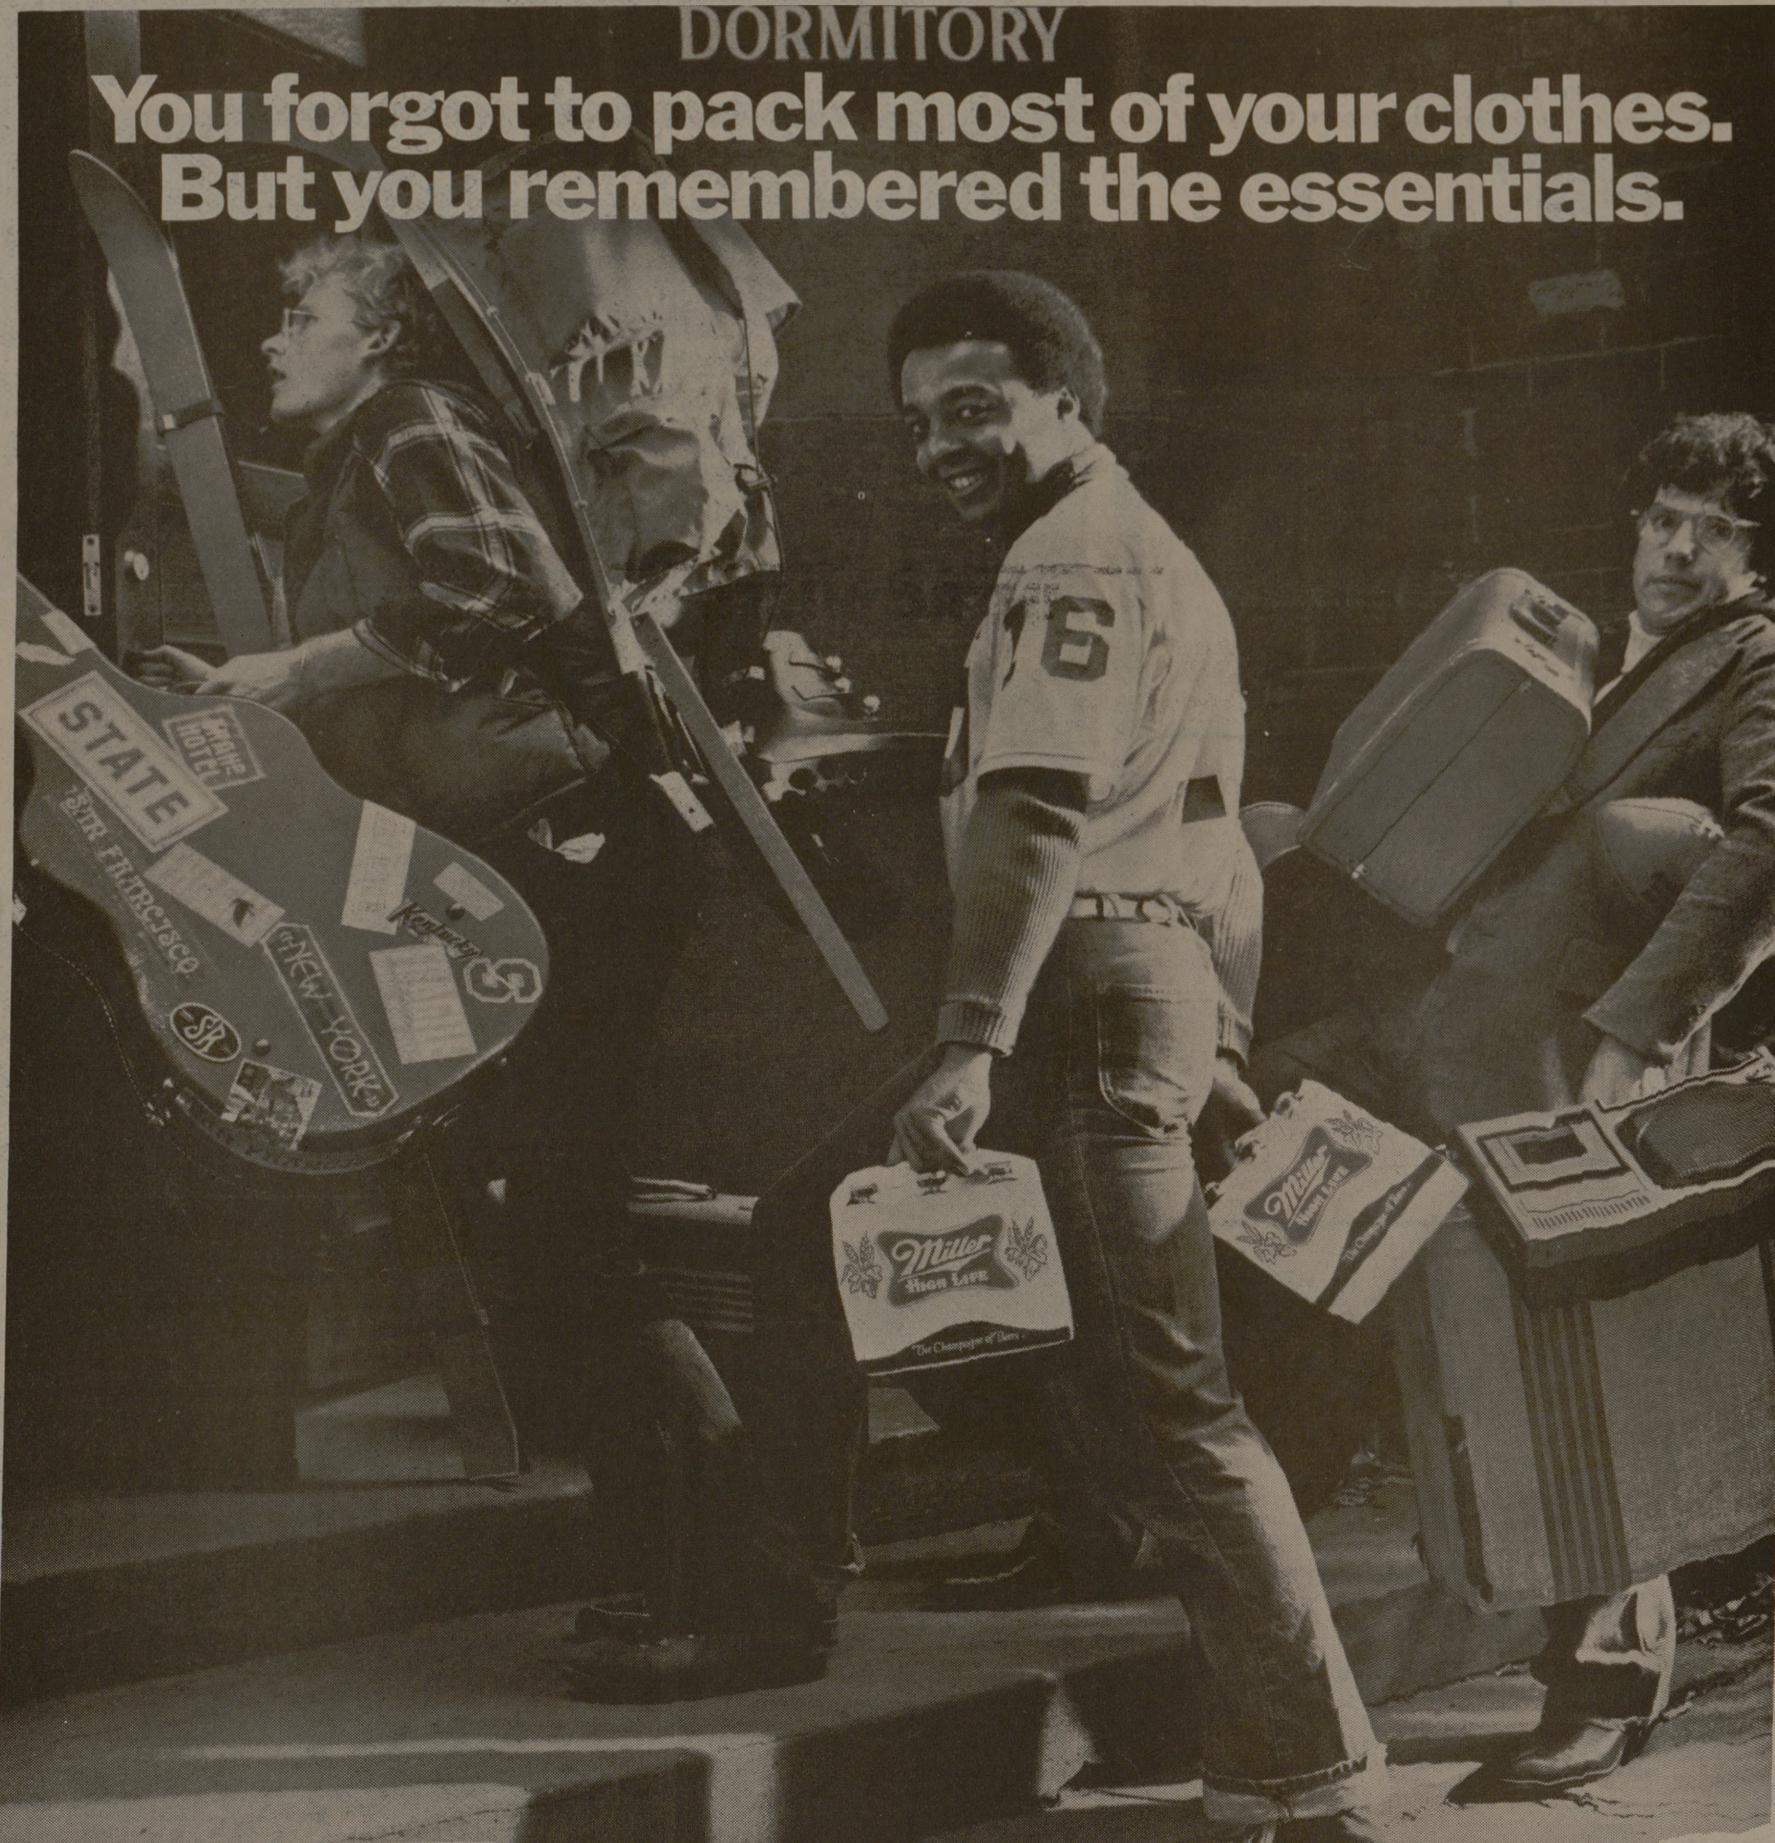

Meanwhile, U.S. Attorney R.E. Thompson said his office is continuing to investigate whether Gabaldon's recruitment effort has violated federal laws.
