UH center funds audited; no indictments anticipated

United Press International
HOUSTON — A Harris County grand jury reviewing the investigation into $29,000 missing from the University of Houston Continuing Education Center has returned no indictments.

Assistant District Attorney Ross Rommel said "no indictments were sought" by this special crimes bureau.

"There will be no indictments in this case," Rommel said Tuesday.

"They (the grand jury) returned no indictments and none are anticipated."

Although numerous bank records were subpoenaed during the investigation, Rommel refused to comment on whether any criminal wrongdoing had been discovered or what happened to the money.

"I just can't give you an answer on that," Rommel said.

Rommel refused to comment on whether the investigation had touched on the death of George Young, the center's assistant dean and assistant professor. Young's death was ruled a suicide on June 14. Young was not accused of any wrongdoing.
