Railway service gets going back on the track

United Press International
WASHINGTON — More than 100 railroads, finally freed from a paralyzing four-day strike by a federal court order, struggled Saturday to restore freight and passenger service to the nation.

The strike stranded thousands of commuters, delayed the shipment of grains and other fall harvests and posed a major threat to the economy, prompting the White House to intervene.

Striking railway clerks across the country, assured by a federal judge they are protected against management reprisals, pulled down picket signs and reported to work. A temporary restraining order issued by District Judge Aubrey Robinson Friday forced the railway clerks back on their jobs during a 60-day cooling off period.

Railroad officials said service was being restored promptly and the rail systems should be in normal operating condition before today.

Amtrak, its passenger service crippled outside the Boston-Washington corridor, restored service Saturday to 40 states.

An emergency board established by President Carter will begin seeking a solution today to the Norfolk and Western Railway labor dispute that ultimately spread to more than 130 rail systems.

The striking Brotherhood of Railway, Airline and Steamship clerks, in a dispute involving job protection and automated machinery, struck the Virginia-based railroad July 10.

The strike spread to 43 other railroads Tuesday, then 73 railroads Wednesday, and finally to more than 130. Near the end of the week automakers announced shutdowns and other industries began layoffs because of the cutoff of parts and supplies.

The Justice Department joined the railroads in seeking relief and the temporary injunction was issued Friday.

Robinson said his order was "double edged" to send the strikers back to work but under protection against dismissals and other reprisals.

Reports coming in to union president Fred Kroll indicate that throughout the country practically all pickets have been withdrawn, union spokesman Henry Fleisher said.

The emergency board established by the president under terms of the Railway Labor Act has 60 days to find a solution to the Virginia system dispute. Robinson's order bans any union interference with the railroads during the negotiating period.

Black Caucus likes speech by president

United Press International
WASHINGTON — President Carter brought thousands of cheering blacks to their feet Saturday night with his vow to fight for full employment and ERA extension bills — and to keep Andrew Young as U.N. ambassador as long as he is president.

He brought the 8th annual Congressional Black Caucus dinner to a climax when he called Rosa Parks, the woman whose protest started the Montgomery bus boycott, to the stage and greeted her with a hug.

"Right on!" he shouted as he finished.

The black tie audience shouted back, "right on!"

Carter asked a series of questions — "can we afford to be satisfied when we've got hundreds of thousands of young black men walking the streets looking for jobs?" The crowd roared "no!"

Carter also got loud applause when he announced his support for the Humphrey-Hawkins full employment bill this year and when he predicted the Senate would pass next week a bill extending time for ratifying the equal rights amendment.

The crowd rose its feet when Carter said: "As long as I am president, and Andy Young is willing to stay there, he'll be U.N. ambassador."

Heart attack kills Edgar Bergen

United Press International
LAS VEGAS, Nev. — Edgar Bergen, who parlayed his wooden dummy Charlie McCarthy into one of the greatest comic acts in show business, died in his sleep Saturday morning of an apparent heart attack. He was 64 years old.

The flip and cheeky Charlie, who continually kidded Bergen about his "Water" moving when throwing his dummy, was gone, too, at 64. He had never rip off another, "I'll wwwww'em down!"

Caesar's Palace Executive Vice President Harry Wald said Bergen's body was discovered in his suite at 4 p.m. EDT, a few hours before a performance.

Clark County Deputy Coroner Robert Brown said Bergen died in his room of an apparent heart attack, estimated the time of death as between 3 p.m. and 4 p.m. EDT.

Bergen's body was taken to Palm Jumeirah in Las Vegas, but a spokesman said it would probably be sent to Southern California for burial.

After more than 50 years in the business, the ventriloquist had announced Sept. 21 that he and Charlie were ready to retire — Bergen going to relax in the sun and warmth of Palm Springs, Calif., and Charlie to the Smithsonian Institution.

"What are you retiring from?" the dummy asked Bergen when the two announced their retirement. "You haven't had to work since you met me."

Bergen opened Wednesday for a two-week engagement at Caesar's Palace with Andy Williams and the Lennon Sisters. His last performances were to have been in Cincinnati and Cleveland in December.

"I had dinner with him last night between shows, the first time we had a chance to sit down and talk since the opening night," Williams said.

"It was an absolute shock," said Kathy Lennon, the second youngest of the singing foursome. "He was the sweetest person that we have ever worked with. He was so kind. 'We all agreed ... that we'd just go on and do the show.'"
