Congress opens sessions to TV

United Press International
 WASHINGTON — Congress own version of the situation comedy premieres in living color next January.

That's when full-time color television coverage of the Congressional sessions will begin. Representatives of the major TV networks scheduled a meeting Wednesday with congressional leaders to work out the television arrangements.

The House has purchased six color cameras which initially will be used only for closeup shots of individual congressmen. The television networks have asked that so-called "reaction" and "wide-overall" shots also be permitted.

Congressmen previously debated having "wide over-all" shots in which the entire House could be viewed.

The television feeds will be available to everyone. One cable system in Arlington, Va., agreed to reserve a channel for continuous House coverage and a nonprofit cable system is being organized to provide the coverage to schools and libraries across the country.

Destroyed grainbin unchecked since '73
 United Press International
 ST. PAUL — A grain elevator that exploded Tuesday at the Bunge Corp. terminal in Savage, killing at least two men, had not been inspected for five years, state officials said.
 The elevator was inspected in July, 1973. Three violations were found and had been corrected by a follow-up inspection a month later, but officials said it has not been inspected since.
 James Pinneault, assistant director of the Minnesota Labor Department's occupational safety and health division, said about 140 Minnesota's 500 to 600 elevators have been inspected recently as the state took over responsibility inspections.
 Pinneault said a task force for serious violations in many of the elevators that were spot checked. The Bunge elevator would have been inspected eventually, he said, but Tuesday's accident called for immediate attention. He said it would be at the scene this week to investigate the cause of the explosion and fire.
