Houston, Dallas?

Democrats scope out 1980 convention site

United Press International
WASHINGTON — If the Democratic Party had to choose today, its 1980 presidential convention would probably be held in Houston or Detroit, while the Republicans have nine cities to choose from, led by Dallas, Los Angeles and Minneapolis.

Spokesmen for both parties stress that no decisions have been made on any cities. But a number of political and logistical factors rule against certain cities even before party committees begin looking over sites.

Ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment will probably have a major role in determining where the 1980 conventions are held — since the National Organization for Women's boycott of states that have not ratified the amendment is expected to still be on.

The Democrats have a firm rule against meeting in these states. Republicans backed ERA in their 1976 platform, and while they have no rule, it is unlikely they would take the political risk of going to an unratified state.

Traditional convention cities such as Miami Beach, Chicago, New Orleans, Kansas City and Las Vegas would be ruled out because their states have not ratified ERA.

they don't want to go to California where Gov. Edmund G. Brown is a potential Carter presidential rival.

The Republicans' site selection committee will hold hearings in Washington next week on a convention site.

GOP spokesman Pete Teeley said Detroit, Miami Beach, Kansas City, Minneapolis-St. Paul, New Orleans, Cleveland, Dallas-Fort Worth, Los Angeles, and Las Vegas have all applied for the convention.

Four of the nine have ERA problems, and Cleveland and Detroit are short on hotel rooms, leaving Dallas, Los Angeles and Minneapolis as the early leaders.

"But who knows, anything can happen between now and 1980," Teeley said.

When asked about Los Angeles, Morrison said, "We'd like something a little more centralized," which is the polite way of saying

First Arab conference held since 1976 war

United Press International
BEIT EDDINE, Lebanon — While Syrian forces and Christian militiamen traded sniper fire in Beirut, Arab foreign ministers Monday tried to work out a peace plan to end the lingering fighting.

President Elias Sarkis late Sunday opened the first Arab conference on the Lebanon crisis since the 1975-76 civil war, telling the delegates the Lebanese were counting on the diplomats to "free the country from its ordeal," official Beirut radio said.

The conferees — representing Lebanon, Syria, Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Qatar, the United Arab Emirates and Sudan — drew up a "working paper," conference sources said, for Monday's talks at the 19th-century summer presidential palace in the southeast hill town of Beit Eddine.

Each side has accused the other of violating the cease-fire. A statement from the mostly Syrian Arab League peacekeeping force Sunday said the militias were "trying to keep the security situation precarious, especially during the meeting of the Arab foreign ministers."

The communique said a Lebanese security officer was wounded by a sniper near Lebanon's palace of justice on the dividing line between Christian eastern Beirut and mostly Moslem western Beirut.
