Houston toad — dead or alive?

The Houston Zoo is conductg a program aimed at saving Houston toad - which may o longer exist in the Houston rea, a curator said here Tuesday

Last year efforts by the federal overnment to preserve habitat the Houston area for the ndangered Houston toad reated an uproar among busissmen and politicians.

The Houston toad is found any in the Houston area and a puple of areas in southeast and lington Air Force Base that is no longer in use as critical habitat, as well as another area near the Addicks Reservoir, for the toad. th-central Texas. Dr. James Dexon of the Texas tiles for the Houston Zoo, spoke to the Texas A&M University

&M Wildlife and Fisheries Scice department said a bureaucratic mistake in Washington caused a Sharpstown shopping center and other prime development areas to be declared "critical habitat." Construction is prohibited on land which is declared critical habitat for an endangered species. Dixon said the land was listed as critical habitat without anyone from Washington coming to Houston to investigate the area.

He said the problem has been corrected by listing part of El-

Hugh Quinn, curator of rep-

Herpetological Club Tuesday night.

Quinn said no one is sure if the toad still exists in the Houston area. It is still found in small areas near Bastrop and Caldwell. The program at the Houston

Zoo is an attempt to increase the number of toads in captivity so that they may be released in the wild in an effort to prevent their extinction. The project is funded by a $2,000 grant from the U.S.

Department of Interior. Quinn said the zoo obtained 6,000 toad eggs from ponds near Bastrop and hatched them at the A number of factors have probably lead to the near extinction of the toad, Quinn said.

"Watershed programs which drain the temporary pools that they breed in have forced them to breed in permanent ponds," he said. "This has probably lead to hybridization with other species of toads.

Quinn said it is possible that the toad's reduced numbers are due to a natural extinction process and not related to human interference.

Five hundred young toads were released in Bastrop earlier this year, and adults will be released this spring, Dixon said. He said the federal government must grant permission before any of the toads may be released in the Houston area.

BOULDER, Colo. - Representatives of oil-producing nations are disappointed that the United States has not been able to institute effective energy conservation measures and control its inflation.

Inflation 'disappointing'

Three panelists at the Fifth International Conference on Energy in the 1980s Monday said strong conservation measures are needed or the United States will face an increasing petroleum shortage.

"Maximum conservation on the domestic front and the encouragement of conservation abroad" are necessary, said Dr. Feretdon Fesharaki, advisor to the prime minister of Iran.

Fesharaki said the United States should institute a 50 percent sales tax on gasoline to keep consumption down

Echoing his comments was Arturo del Castillo of Mexico, economic advisor to the general director of Petroleos Mexicanos.

'Oil is as important as food and should not be subject to monopoly by private groups," he said. "Oil, like all other natural resources, must contribute to the welfare of mankind.

Del Castillo said Mexico had decided not to export natural gas and would use it instead to release more crude oil for export.

Taleb Ali of the economics department of Kuwait said OPEC nations saw their oil profits decline by 15 percent last year because of U.S. inflation

'Kuwait oil revenues have been lost in a real value of $1.2 million per day," he said.

But he said Kuwait was not being economically damaged and would maintain its production at the pres-ent level, or at a slight decrease.

Oil nations rap U.S.

In another session at the conference, an energy consultant said the price of crude oil will more than double during the decade that started in 1975.

Edwards Symonds, a former dep-uty assistant secretary for energy policy in the U.S. Department of the Treasury, predicted the price of crude oil will rise nearly 130 percent from 1975 to 1985.

Symonds said the world demand for oil would reach 61 million barrels a day by 1985, which said would mean a "finding rate" of new oil of 22 billion barrels per year. He said he doubted the new oil could be found at that rate.
