

Living with the law

My car broke down on the highway this week, and when I went back with a friend to fix it three days later, I discovered that the Highway Patrol had had a wrecker tow it away. Can they do that?

The police can have any car towed away by a private wrecker which has been abandoned on the public right of way for 48 hours. The owner of the car must be notified within 10 days of his right to reclaim the car upon payment for towing.

Say 'howdy,' revive tradition

By MICHELLE SCUDDER
Battalion Staff

One of the biggest traditions at Texas A&M University, the practice of saying "howdy," is suffering from a lack of participation. But "Howdy Days" are here again to help revive it.

The Memorial Student Center, Residence Hall Association, Student Government, Off Campus Student Association and the Corps of Cadets are sponsoring activities today, Thursday and Friday to stress Aggie friendliness.

The 79th person to say "howdy" to one person from each of the five organizations will receive complimentary dinner, concert, or movie tickets.

Some "Howdy Days" activities include an Eat the Hell Out of Rice and a Traditions contest, both at Rudder fountain on Friday.

"The student body has increased so rapidly that friendliness is beginning to lag," Corps Commander Bob Kamensky said. "The potential is still there, but a lot of people haven't been reached by it yet. We're hoping that during Howdy Days, people will catch the message and we can rejuvenate the Aggie spirit that is lacking this year," Kamensky said.

Traditions programs, which detail general facts and knowledge about Texas A&M, will be presented by Corps of Cadets members on Wednesday and Thursday evenings to apartments and dorms on request, Kamensky said.

Howdy messages will greet on and off campus students during the week as RHA is encouraging the residence halls to use howdy themes in their Rice University game spirit signs and dorm decorations and OCSA is decorating the shuttle buses with howdy signs.

"People look down at the ground now instead of saying 'hi,'" Jill Hall, OSCA president said. "We want to get them back into the mood again. We want people walking across campus to know it's Texas A&M instead of some other Southwest Conference school."

Howdy buttons will be on sale for 35 cents on the first floor of the Memorial Student Center Thursday and Friday.

A videotape commercial will be on in the MSC during this week, in which Student Body President Bobby Tucker will be talking about Howdy Days and encouraging people to participate in it. Also, public service announcements on local radio stations will be promoting Howdy Days during the week.

Howdy Days will be wrapped up by midnight yell practice Friday and the Texas A&M versus Rice game Saturday.

Thanksgiving turkey higher, supply down

United Press International

WASHINGTON — If the turkey slices on your plate are a little thin this Thanksgiving, you can fill up with cranberries and sweet potatoes.

The Agriculture Department said Monday that turkey supplies will be "light" during November, meaning prices will be higher.

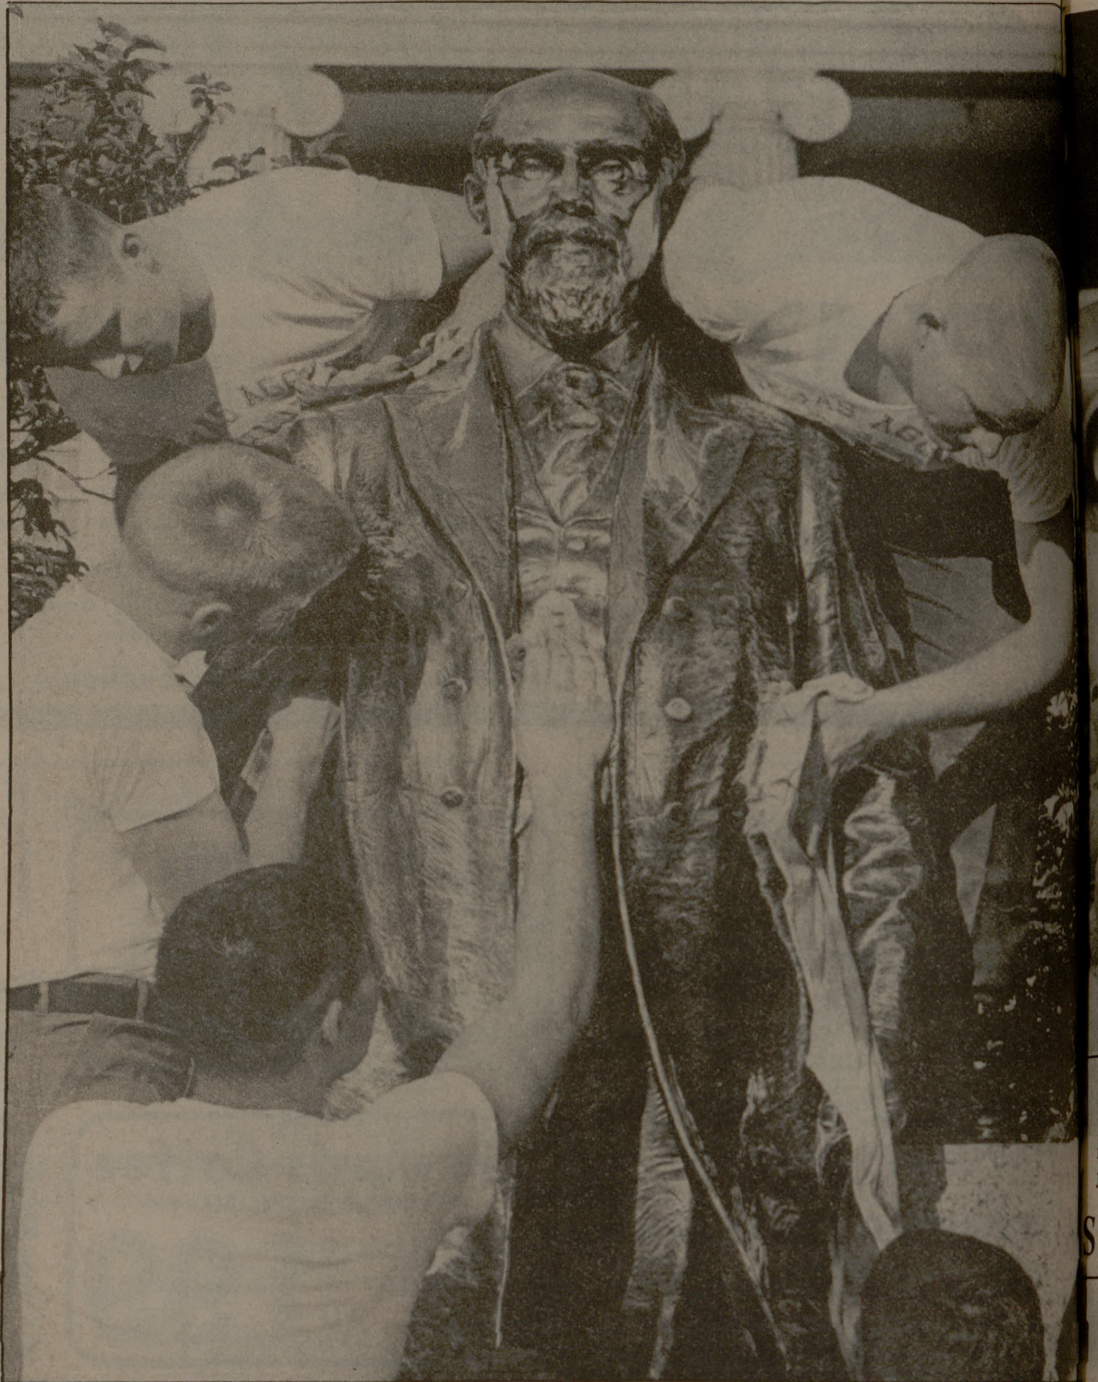

But cranberries and sweet potatoes will be "plentiful" and therefore more reasonable in price.

Turkey supplies during November are expected to be 5 to 6 percent below last year, mostly because shoppers scared off by high beef prices have turned to substitutes, including turkey.

The supplies are expected to be 7 to 8 percent below the average of the last three years.

The greater demand has raised the price of turkey as well as other competing meats.

Current production of turkeys will be up 2 percent in November over last year, but the amount of turkey held in cold storage will be well below last year.

Sully gets a little elbow grease

Sully is a fairly regular ritual for freshmen members of the Corps, especially before a home football game or big event on campus.

Kids find use for chips

United Press International

CHICAGO — Officials of the Vermont Buildings Department can stop worrying. Thales Kaster's junior high school students in Chicago have some swell ideas about what to do with 800 tons of soggy wood chips.

Kaster, a teacher at Thomas Brennan School on Chicago's South Side, saw a UPI dispatch in the Chicago Tribune last week detailing the plight of Vermont officials who intended to use a huge pile of wood chips as fuel — until they realized the chips were waterlogged.

He decided the problem would make a good exercise in creative writing.

One of his students, DeShonette Williams, suggested the chips could be made into "little tiny checkers" or a puzzle "for the children to use them for games or anything. But all I can say is you should do something because if you don't, there is going to be a big wood chip pile where it is. So do it quick."

A budding environmentalist,

Allen Wilson, said the chips could be used to make paper.

"Most people think we have enough wood for paper," he said. "But we are running out of wood. We need the wood chips."

Chandra Brown — obvious animal enthusiast — had the unique solution to the soggy chip problem.

The department, she said, should sell them to a pet shop that would use the woodpecker and let him peck them.
