Experts review Legionnaires' disease

United Press International
ATLANTA — Some of the world's medical scientists meet here today to share their knowledge about Legionnaires' disease, an ailment caused by an organism researchers say is different from all previously known agents of human disease.

The National Center for Disease Control, which is hosting the three-day international symposium, has 500 scientists and physicians from more than 30 countries will attend the sessions.

It is being sponsored by the CDC, the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases and the World Health Organization. Two representatives from the Soviet Union were expected to attend.

Dr. William Foege, CDC director who will address the opening session, has described the Legionnaires' disease bacterium as unlike any bacterium medical science has ever encountered. Its behavior in the laboratory and in experimental animals is different, he said, as is its genetic structure.

The bacterium that causes the pneumonia-like illness, which has a fatality rate of about 15 percent, was discovered by a CDC microbiologist in 1976, six months after an epidemic of the illness at an American Legion convention in Philadelphia struck more than 200 people and killed 29.

Since then, medical scientists have found that the organism lives in water and is capable of being spread through air conditioning systems. They also have discovered that an antibiotic, erythromycin, is effective in treating the ailment if administered in time.

Dr. David Fraser, head of the CDC's special pathogenic unit that has been conducting a two-year investigation of the disease, said he expected the symposium to shed

Needs combat soldiers

Army may raise benefits

United Press International
WASHINGTON — The Army is pushing a new plan, aimed at young men who want to go on to college, that would reduce some enlistments from three to two years as a way to attract higher-quality recruits.

Army officials said the plan, to be submitted to Defense Secretary Harold Brown and the White House Office of Management and Budget, could help attract up to 12,000 two-year recruits into infantry, artillery and tank units next year.

The plan would offer recruits an additional $2,000 in educational benefits, raising the total to $7,400 for two years of service. Women would not be eligible because they are barred from the combat jobs the Army wants to fill.

Although the Pentagon officially maintains the volunteer system is a success, officials privately concede the Army has encountered problems recruiting combat soldiers.

Combat jobs traditionally are least popular because such training does not help soldiers land civilian jobs when their tour of duty is over.

Soldiers recruited under the plan would be required to remain in a reserve "pool" up to four years after discharge. They would not have to attend reserve meetings.

Under the all-volunteer system, recruits now joining the Army have to serve a minimum of three years on active duty.

Officials said the plan was not aimed at changing the racial makeup of the Army, which has included an increasingly higher proportion of blacks in recent years.

Army Secretary Clifford Alexander, who is black, is opposed to any policy limiting enlistments of blacks, who he says see military service as a means of increasing their opportunities. The number of blacks in the 770,000-member Army is now around 30 percent.

Carter signs bill to prohibit big loans to bank insiders

United Press International
WASHINGTON — When President Carter signed the most extensive overhaul of the nation's banking since the 1930s, he probably was reminded of one of the most elegant periods of his administration so far.

The banking measure, signed by Carter without comment Friday, bans preferential or excessive loans provided to bank "insiders" — a key element of the Senate investigation of Bert Lance, who was forced to resign as director of the Office of Management and Budget following disclosures of his banking practices.

Lance, a Georgia banker and long-time Carter friend, had made heavy use of insider loans before he joined the Carter administration. The controversy engulfed the administration until it was decided that Lance had to go.

Although Carter acted without comment on the bank bill, he issued statements on six of the other eight bills he signed into law Friday.

The banking bill, by banning the inside dealings, eliminates what the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. said to be the cause of 60 percent of all bank failures.

It also imposes restrictions on officers of one bank holding directorships in other banks in the same geographical area. The FDIC is given greater authority in approving new branches for state banks that are not members of the federal corporation.

The new law also provides bank customers with greater privacy for their bank records by requiring customers to be notified if the government wishes to examine the records. The request may be challenged.

Procedures also are set up for closer supervision and auditing of all bank activities.

Carter also approved: —The National Parks and Recreation Act of 1978, which sets up 15 new units in the National Park System and designates nearly two million acres in eight national parks as wilderness areas. It authorizes $725 million during a five-year period to repair urban recreation sites and adds eight rivers to the Wild and Scenic Rivers System.

—A bill adjusting U.S. drug laws to meet the International Convention on Psychotropic Substances, a treaty for controlling amphetamines and barbiturates.

—Legislation establishing a special seven-member, Cabinet-level panel to ensure federal agencies do not take actions that would threaten endangered species.
