Ags host Razorbacks

By SEAN PETTY
Battalion Staff

When the Arkansas Razorbacks play the Texas A&M Aggies tonight, they may be playing against more than just the five men on the court.

The sixth man, or factor in this case, is the University's very own G. Rollie White Coliseum.

But before you run to your local bookie betting your life's savings on the Aggies because they have the home court advantage, you better remember what's happened in the Southwest Conference so far and what the home court advantage has meant.

The lowly, or so they used to be, Rice Owls travelled to Lubbock and beat the red-hot Raiders of Texas Tech. Then there was Texas which went to the hills of Arkansas and defeated the previously undefeated Razorbacks in Fayetteville.

And who would have thought the Houston Cougars could lose three games in Hofheinz Pavilion in a year, much less in a row. The Cougs managed to lose by one to Arkansas, and get blown out by Texas and the Aggies.

Yet the Aggies' G. Rollie White Coliseum could really make the difference according to Arkansas head coach Eddie Sutton.

"G. Rollie may be the toughest place in the conference to win a game," Sutton said. "The crowd has great enthusiasm and are as loud as anywhere we've played. But the difference is that they do it in a nice way."

"The fans are very controlled and enthusiastic at A&M," he said. "I think our two schools have a very friendly rivalry. We enjoy playing at G. Rollie because it is fun to play there."

"In fact, the four times I have taken a team down there I think the biggest point spread was two points and I'm sure tonight will be no different."

Sutton should get all the "fun" and "enthusiasm" he can handle as the game with Arkansas is sold out.

But how will the Hogs handle the five men on the court?

"You can't center on just one person and say 'we're gonna shut him down' against a team like Texas A&M," Sutton said. "They (the Aggies) have five starters who can score 20 points on any given night. And (Tyrone) Ladson is a sixth man who can score as much as anyone. So it's very hard to stop a well-rounded team like A&M. They definitely have one of the best teams in the country."

The Aggies are well-rounded. All five of the starters made an all-tournament team in at least one of the three holiday tournaments they played in.

The Ags will be hard to stop offensively. Vernon Smith is averaging 16.3 points a game, Rynn Wright is averaging 13.3 points, Rudy Woods 14.1, David Britton 12.9, Dave Goff 5.4, and Ladson is coming off the bench with a 13.3 average shooting 67 percent from the field.

"I would have to say Texas A&M is playing the most consistent basketball in the conference," Sutton said. "They had the toughest non-conference schedule and had some very impressive wins."

The Razorbacks come to Aggieland after losing to North Carolina Sunday on national television.

"We didn't shoot well," said Sutton, "we could never quite get over the hump and get ahead of them. We're still a pretty young team and we knew we would have to play very, very well to beat North Carolina at home. Another problem we had is that (Arkansas senior Sidney) Moncrief wasn't playing full speed due to an injury. He can play fine, he's just slowed down a little."

"But I have been pleased with the team's performance so far," he said.

"We have played better than I thought we would and games than I thought we would."

Razorbacks are 10-2. Arkansas's apparent success of other teams such as SMU, shows that the conference is becoming more balanced.

This balance also means team in the conference anywhere on any given day.

"I knew at the beginning of the season that the conference balance was not as good as it used to be. I also felt that the championship would be shared between Texas and A&M and I still ball clubs are playing some deep in talent."

"As far as the game tonight, either team can win it."

Tonight's game should be of the boards with Moncrief averaging 11.3 rebounds a game. The Aggie line is not far behind averaging 9.2 rebounds Wright 8.6, and Smith 5.4.

Defensively, Woods' major force for the Aggie team had all last year blocked 37 shots this year. The Aggie team had all last year blocked 37 shots this year.

So if you're a betting person, remember the in-lane which has been running on home courts this year.
