Solar heat may cut 14% off fuel oil bill of seed company

United Press International GREENWOOD, S.C. — A mail order seed company expects to save about 4,200 gallons of oil a year with an experimental solar heating system installed recently to help heat two of its 11,000-square-foot greenhouses. Company president William I. Park says engineers who installed the system predict a 14 percent saving on fuel bills with the prototype units but recommend the firm closely monitor both the weather and fuel consumed this winter. The system is designed to provide as much as 60 percent of the greenhouses' annual energy needs.
