

New medical facility lauded by A&M VIPs

At right, representatives of Texas A&M University's multifaceted medical program field questions during a press conference at Temple. They are, from left, V.J. Belda, director of the Veterans Administration health center in Temple; Texas A&M President Jarvis Miller; G.V. Brindley, chief of staff at Scott and White Hospital, and Texas A&M dean of medicine, Robert Stone.

The VA hospital at Temple will serve Texas A&M's College of Medicine as a student center and office building when the first class arrives in July for two years of clinical training.

Students in the program will undergo two years of clinical training at Scott and White, and Veterans Administration facilities in Temple, Waco and Marlin.

Carter set on election committee

WASHINGTON — President Carter has not yet said he will seek election next year — but he's doing the preliminary work for a campaign.

In a major step, the president authorized creation of an "exploratory" campaign committee to be headed by Democratic National Committee treasurer Evan Dohelle, a Democratic source said Sunday.

DNC staff members telephoned between 800 and 1,000 party leaders across the country Saturday to inform them the committee will be formed, probably within the next 10 days, the source said.

The law requires that candidates who intend to raise funds for a political campaign file papers with the Federal Election Commission, forming an exploratory committee allows money to be raised on behalf of a candidate without having to make a formal announcement.

Dohelle, 33, who worked on Carter's 1976 campaign, will be "campaign coordinator" instead of manager. That was seen as an indication that major campaign strategy could still come from the president's chief aide and 1976 campaign manager, Hamilton Jordan, and other senior White House staffers.

Both Jordan and press secretary Jody Powell will remain in the White House, "at least for the time being," the source said. Dohelle is expected to resign as DNC treasurer to begin his new duties.

"That's the reason almost every exploratory committee is filed," she said. "You can't raise a dime without committee on record (at the FEC), whereas you can organize."

Most of the 1980 presidential hopefuls so far, such as Republicans George Bush and Ronald Reagan, have filed papers for exploratory committees. But the only major candidates to announce formally are former Texas Gov. John Connally and Rep. Philip Crane, R-Ill.
