Terrorists using world as stage to air complaints

United Press International
NEW YORK — Terrorism is theater. Macabre. Deliberately choreographed. Playing to an audience of millions on a world stage — an actor's dream.
 "Terrorists want a lot of people watching, not a lot of people dying," says Brian M. Jenkins, Rand Corp.'s authority on the subject of international terrorism.

President Carter expressed outrage "at the senseless terrorism that those who pay inadequate value to human life." The occasion was the return of the body of Ambassador Adolph Dubs. His Valentine's Day killing was in a gun battle between Afghanistan police and Soviet sect Moslems who had kidnapped him in an act of international terrorism.

Are we entering the Age of Terrorism — or have we? "Terrorism is not a new phenomenon," says the Foreign Policy Association, "but terrorism practiced on an international scale is new." Just nine days before the slaying of Ambassador Dubs in Kabul, "omnibus antiterrorist act" was introduced in the U.S. Senate. Senators Jacob K. Javits of New York and Abraham A. Ribicoff of Connecticut.

It would require the president to report every six months to Congress every country that he determines to be a supporter of international terrorism. Then sanctions would be applied against each: no sale of military equipment, no foreign aid, no export of any commodities.

Javits says the purpose of the bill is to show U.S. willingness in the area "and to do its part as other nations must do theirs." One of the important things to be tackled is the problem of "airports that are unsafe."

The UPI United Nations bureau manager, Alvin B. Webb, says "you've heard it before — 'One man's terrorist is another man's freedom fighter.'" Yonah Alexander, editor of the quarterly "Terrorism," and director of the Institute for Studies in International Terrorism, lists among the contributing factors of terrorism the "double standard of morality (some terrorists are heroes and some are criminals)."

In an interview he named other reasons: No universal agreement as to who is a terrorist; disagreement on root causes; contribution of the media; some governments are intimidated easily; weak punishment; existence of an international network "loose? well, not loose" — supplying weapons, training, attacks by proxy.

Are we going to live in a world of increasing terrorism? Jenkins of the Rand Corp.: "The use of terrorist tactics will grow as a mode of political expression, of gaining international attention and achieving limited political goals. Terrorism is likely to remain an enduring problem. It's likely to become a permanent feature of modern society, just as criminal violence is.

"Will there be a rise in the level? I don't know. That calls for clairvoyance, not analysis."

Improved mass communications, including satellites, provide almost instantaneous access to a worldwide audience. There is availability of sophisticated weapons for terrorists.

When Arab terrorists were captured outside Rome they had their possession a Soviet-made, infrared, heat-seeking surface-to-air missile in 1974.

Also, there are new vulnerabilities in society. Civilian airliners filled with hostages at 39,000 feet. Bombs in Rome transformers relay stations cause huge blackouts, and that happened in California in 1976 when power was cut off to 25,000 San Jose homes.

Now let's look at the record.
 U.S. State Department figures on worldwide international terrorism incidents — not including actions with criminal motive, or those country that don't involve a party outside the country — show that the four years 1975-78 that 959 incidents killed 1,275 persons wounded 2,810.

Six of the categories of incidents break down like this:
 Kidnapping — 1975, 38; 1976, 30; 1977, 22; 1978, 27.
 Barricade hostage — 1975, 14; 1976, 4; 1977, 5; 1978, 11.
 Hijacking (land, sea, and air) — 1975, 4; 1976, 6; 1977, 8; 1978, 8.
 Assassinations — 1975, 20; 1976, 48; 1977, 23; 1978, 29.
 Letter bombings (real or attempted) — 3, 11, 3, 5.
 Other bombings (real or attempted) — 189, 67, 188, 202.
 The Rand Corp. keeps its own figures, and Jenkins says: "Terrorists have attracted global attention with tactics that, though shocking, have not killed hundreds of thousands. Indeed, the 10 years of 1968-78 there were about 1,000 incidents of international terrorism in which 1,017 persons were killed. That's up to 26 persons per incident."
